Nyets to neutrality

Moscow mocks non-aligned Kabul plan

Times News Services

The Soviet Union has angrily denounced Western talk of establishing a neutral and non-aligned Afghanistan as a way of getting Soviet troops out and ending the current East-West confrontation.

The denunciation, broadcast by the official Moscow Radio, contained an implicit admission that the Afghan regime of President Babrak Karmal could not survive without a continuation of Soviet military support that put it in power Dec. 27.

The broadcast came four days after British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington gave to the Soviet ambassador in London an outline of a plan that has been discussed within the European Economic Community for making Afghanistan a neutral, non-aligned country. It followed President Carter's suggestion that Moslem troops in a UN peacekeeping force might be able to replace Soviet troops in a neutralized country.

The European plan was drawn up in hopes of finding a graceful way out that the Soviet Union could accept without having Afghanistan turned into a hostile country on its central Asian border. It was completed after Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev said Soviet troops would begin withdrawing once the United States and neighbors of Afghanistan guaranteed non-interference there.

Talk of a neutralization plan was received coolly by Soviet media. But the broadcast Tuesday, a commentary by a Soviet television and radio "political observer" with the Central Asian name Farid Seyful Mulyukov, was more blunt.

Afghan neutrality is being discussed abroad "without the consent of the lawful government of Afghanistan and even without asking it how it feels about it," the observer said.

One diplomat quoted Afghan refugees in Pakistan, most of them primitive tribespeople, as having described "metal cannisters falling from planes and spewing out blue-green-gray smoke on hitting the ground.

"These backward people then describe how villagers acted like madmen, became paralyzed and died," he said. "These people may have been coached into what to say but there are so many allegations that something must be behind the claims."

The Pakistani government, meanwhile, rejected a $400 million arms and economic package offered to counter the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. President Mohammed Zia ul-Hag had previously termed the offer "peanuts."

And in Washington, U.S. Deputy Defence Secretary Graham Claytor disclosed today the White House plans to dispatch seven ships by June to the Indian Ocean region with equipment to support a Marine brigade of 10,000 men.

Nkomo joins Rhodesia coalition

SALISBURY (UPI) — Robert Mugabe, Rhodesia's new leader, today brought rival guerrilla chief Joshua Nkomo into a planned coalition government, which is expected to receive final independence from Britain in about three weeks.

But a spokesman for the prime minister-designate ruled out any similar offer to Bishop Abel Muzorewa, another black leader who headed the Salisbury regime near the end of the bitter seven-year civil war against the Mugabe and Nkomo guerrillas.

The country, which will be called Zimbabwe upon independence, was calm after a day of victory celebrations by the country's seven million blacks. Police in Salisbury said there were no unusual incidents.

Life in the capital was normal, and despite earlier fears about a victory by leftist Mugabe, there seemed to be no movement by Rhodesia's 220,000 whites to leave the country.

"We've decided to wait and see what happens," said one white businessman.

In London, British officials said they expected to turn power over the Mugabe's government in about three weeks. They said a senior member of the Royal Family — possibly Prince Charles — would fly to Salisbury for the independence ceremony.

Mugabe, the landslide winner of the independence elections, and Nkomo, the runner-up, met for 20 minutes Wednesday morning.

Mugabe, a 55-year-old Marxist intellectual, and Nkomo were co-leaders of the Patriotic Front guerrilla alliance that fought the bloody civil war that forced the white minority to agree to black majority rule.

The prime minister-designate decided to split with Nkomo when they returned from exile two months ago to campaign in the elections.

British officials said in London the date of actual independence, when the British flag will be hauled down at midnight and the flag of the new republic run up in its stead, was not yet definite.

Mugabe's Zimbabwe African National Union won 57 of the 80 black seats in the independence legislature, and Nkomo garnered 20 seats. Three other seats went to Muzorewa.

Bilk of human unkindness

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Kidston — a trusting soul — followed the Biblical adage about casting his bread upon the water.

So far all he's got back are crumbs.

Kidston, a 42-year-old jack-of-all-trades now living in Nanaimo, sent out a batch of letters to Chemainus, Duncan, Ladysmith, Tofino and Port Alberni residents selected at random from the phone book.

The letter appealed for funds in support of "The Children's Hospital."

Kidston enclosed a crisp new dollar bill in each letter and asked recipients to match or better it.

"I have done this because I believe that everyone is really kind, way down inside — that no one is really heartless — and that the only reason why folks do not help where help is needed is just because these needs are not impressed upon them hard enough," he said.

Kidston invited the people to keep the dollar if they wanted.

Unhappily, most people did.

Of the 195 letters which went out Feb. 19, only three resulted in contributions being returned.

Two women sent $2 each and another woman matched the dollar.

Twenty-five people simply mailed back Kidston his original dollar.

He has barely recovered his postage cost.

Kidston, who has a reputation for collecting for charities — he once drove his taxi backwards from Tahsis to Gold River to raise money for the Tahsis Lions Club — said in an interview Tuesday he got the letter idea from a book.

"I know it was tried in the U.S. a few years ago and it worked well then," he said.

"But I get the feeling people's attitudes are changing now — people figure it's just another ripoff."

Kidston intended to send 1,000 $1 bills — his letter says that was the investment he was making — but decided to test the idea first.

He agreed his letter wasn't all it might have been.

He copied it verbatim and neglected to mention which children's hospital the funds would be going to — the new Children's Hospital in Vancouver.

And he forgot to offer donors receipts.

Because of those deficiencies the Victoria Better Business Bureau contacted police.

Nanaimo RCMP checked it all out and found no wrong-doing.

Kidston, meanwhile, said he is abandoning the project.

"I still think it's a good thing. My expectations were I could get someone to hire me full time," said Kidston, who lost his taxi business last year.

"But how can I go to a company and get their support if I send out 195 letters and get less than 30 returned?"

Best laid drams gang agley

LONDON (AFP) — Scottish soccer supporters will no longer be able to quench their thirst with a drop of the hard stuff, the British government announced Tuesday from the House of Lords.

All sales of alcohol will be banned from soccer stadiums north of the border and Scottish supporters, whose turbulent invasion of London for the match with England at Wembley Stadium every two years strikes terror into the hearts of all Sassenachs, also will be barred from taking a bottle with them on bus journeys to and from matches.

How that part of the ban will be enforced was not explained.

The one Scottish club which will avoid the drink ban is Berwick Rangers, which plays its soccer in Scotland but sits just on the southern side of the English-Scottish border.

The ban will not be extended to rugby matches, a move which prompted a member of the opposition to claim the Conservative government was making a distinction of classes.

There is very rarely any trouble from over-excited rugby supporters.

Crash cause hidden?

TORONTO (CP) — A lawyer defending Transport Canada in a $15-million lawsuit arising from the crash of a Pacific Western Airlines 737 in 1978 said a Ministry of Transport employee told him the cause of the crash was intentionally hidden in the official report.

William Hobson, a federal government lawyer, also told a federal inquiry into aviation safety he still is not satisfied he has all the information.

Hobson had been called to testify about alleged shredding of documents by the crash investigators, three of whom have been suspended.

They are William Howes, co-ordinator of the report, Harold Fawcett, chief of the transport ministry's safety investigation branch, and Dr. Francois Dube, the medical expert on the team.

Hobson said Dube told him the cause of the crash was hidden in the accident investigation report.

"I said, 'Are you telling me that you buried the real cause of the accident?' I grabbed the accident report and said, 'Show me,' and he (Dube) turned to page 32 and said, 'That's what we buried in the report'."

The paragraph Dube pointed to, Hobson said, read: "The failure to report on the final approach and the unnecessary talk on company frequency represent an unacceptable standard of cockpit practice and discipline."

Diphtheria forces closing of school

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A diphtheria scare at a local elementary school led today to the closure of all classrooms for two weeks.

The Northern Interior Health Unit made the decision to close the school after it was suspected that the disease had spread from grade 1 children to others in grade 7.

School superindendent Alvin Myre said the school will be closed until March 17.

"This is a safety precaution while health officials are checking for further evidence that the disease is spreading," he said.

Special immunization clinics have been set up in the school, but parents are worried the highly contagious disease may spread. (See earlier story on page 3.)

Prices repel Japanese roe buyers

VANCOUVER (CP) — Japanese herring roe buyers [illegible] Tuesday they will not pay the high prices demanded this year by unionized B.C. fishermen because last year the market was artifically inflated by price-gouging.

"A ridiculously-high price scandal and a fake market demand" involving one firm which bought up 45 per cent of the catch in 1979 caused prices for the roe, a delicacy in Japan, to soar, they [illegible]

The result last year was that buyers were paying up to $3,500 a ton for roe herring, far above the supportable price. But there was a successful boycott of the roe in Japan, forcing buyers to take a loss, spokesmen for the buyers said.

However, Jack Nichol, president of the fishermen's union, told the Vancouver and District Labor Council Tuesday that the fishermen are prepared to lose the entire season rather than accept an industry price offer which is little more than half of last year's minimum price.

Nichol said the fishermen would not let themselves suffer "because of phoney reports from Japan." He agreed the market is weak, "but not to the extent the [illegible] companies would have us believe."

The comments came on the [illegible] strike by herring roe fishermen represented by the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union and the Native Brotherhood of B.C.

Main issue in the dispute is prices for the roe. The last union demand is for prices of $1,400 a ton for gillnet-caught herring and $850 a ton for the lower-quality seiner-caught variety.

The Fisheries Association of B.C. has [illegible] a ton for gillnet herring and $325 for seiner herring.

Officials from Itoh C and Company and Mitsui and Co. (Canada) cite $640 as the top price, noting that some companies are still trying to sell 3,500 tons carried over from 1979.

"We've adopted a wait-and-see attitude," said Fred Akao, a representative for another firm, Marubeni Co.

Meanwhile, some independent and co-operative fishermen were getting mixed results so far in fishing off the west coast of Vancouver Island. The herring roe season is expected by federal fisheries officials to last another four to five weeks.

Close contests in U.S. primaries

BOSTON (AP) — George Bush snatched victory by a short head over John Anderson in the Massachusetts Republican primary today after Ronald Reagan edged past Anderson in Vermont.

Former president Gerald Ford said the tight New England contests indicates to him that "there is no consensus" in the Republican presidential race.

Ford, golfing in Lauderhill, Fla., said if people across the U.S. want him to be a candidate "it would be very difficult for me to say no."

Meanwhile, Senator Edward Kennedy claimed a boost for his Democratic challenge with a landslide victory over President Carter in home-state Massachusetts. However, Carter defeated Kennedy by an even more lopsided margin in Vermont.

Kennedy won by better than 2 to 1 in the campaign's first big state primary, winning enough nominating delegates to offset the lead Carter built up earlier. Carter took Vermont by a 3-to-1 margin.

As Tuesday's final ballots were tallied today, Anderson trailed by margins so small that they represented virtual dead heats.

Bush captured Massachusetts by fewer than 3,000 votes out of more than 380,000 cast in nearly complete returns. Reagan's margin was 616 votes in the nearly complete results in the Vermont primary, which drew more than 62,000 Republican ballots.

Ford told a news conference he does not think the contest will be decided until the party holds its national convention at Detroit in July.

The former president said he hasn't decided whether to run. "I will make the decision at the proper time," he said.

Reagan ran third in Massachusetts, close behind Bush and Anderson.

Meanwhile, Senator Howard Baker withdrew today from the 1980 Republican presidential race, saying "it's pretty clear the campaign isn't going anywhere."

The Senate minority leader from Tennessee, who finished fourth in Massachusetts and Vermont Tuesday, told reporters: "I'm withdrawing from further campaigning and competition for the Republican presidential nomination."

Baker did not say who he is supporting for the Republican nomination. He will return to the Senate to reclaim his job as Republican leader.

Militants block UN panel

TEHRAN (CP) — Militants holding the U.S. embassy today continued to defy Iranian authorities who support a meeting between the UN investigating commission and the 50 or so Americans they hold as hostages.

Spokesmen for the militants said they have received no confirmation of statements by President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr that Ayatollah Khomeini has endorsed the meeting and that they remain opposed to such a visit.

Bani-Sadr told reporters Tuesday night Khomeini had been contacted and had given the ruling Revolutionary Council complete authority to decide whether the meeting should be held and on what terms.

The president said the council had reaffirmed its earlier stand in support of the meeting and that it would take place.

Meanwhile, the five-man commission met today with Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh and a spokesman said the commissioners still expect to meet with all of the hostages very soon.

Khomeini's son Ahmad, who has visited several times with the militants and the hostages, told the official Pars news agency that he personally favors the proposed meeting.

"I think the meeting, in my opinion, is useful," he said. "It doesn't hurt anybody and this was part of their (the commissioners') work."

The militants agreed Monday to a meeting between the UN commission and the hostages but only on terms that were unacceptable to the UN group, Bani-Sadr and the Revolutionary Council.

The militants said they would let the commission meet with all the hostages to determine their condition only after the commission issued its report and "convinced" the United Nations of U.S. crimes in Iran and those of desposed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

The militants also demanded that the commission examine embassy documents they said prove five of the about 50 hostages were spies and then interrogate those hostages. The five hostages were not identified.

The commission has almost finished collecting evidence in connection with the revolutionary government's charges against the shah and the U.S. and is preparing to return to New York. Today is the hostages' 123rd day in captivity and the commission is anxious to interview all of them so it will have something positive to bring back to the U.S. government in exchange for its agreement to UN action.

In New York, Iran filed a $3-billion damage suit Tuesday against a sister of deposed Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi.

The action charged that she had "embezzled or otherwise diverted to her own use" Iranian assets valued at about $3-billion, through charitable or other civic organizations.

Tonto dies at 67

Cause of death was given as pneumonia and multiple complications.

January trade surplus dips

OTTAWA (CP) — A sharp drop in overseas exports trimmed the country's trade surplus to a seasonally-adjusted $271 million in January from $658 million in December, Statistics Canada said today.

January exports fell 0.9 per cent to $5.9 billion, seasonally-adjusted, and lagged well behind import growth which was up 6.2 per cent to $5.6 billion.

The January level is below the level of a year ago when a monthly trade surplus of $327 million was recorded.

Preliminary figures from the agency show that only exports of finished products showed a slight increase of 0.3 per cent in January. Farm and industrial machinery exports increased 10 per cent; motor vehicle exports fell nine per cent.

Car sales, mainly to the U.S., fell 17 per cent, but were partly offset by a seven-per-cent increase in parts sales.

Exports of non-ferrous metals, iron and steel, woodpulp and newsprint — all aided by the competitive edge of a cheaper dollar — showed increases for the month. Crude petroleum exports also rose by 14.5 per cent.

Today's weather map is unavailable

Cold dry air continues to give cool temperatures and sunny skies to many areas of the interior. Over southwestern B.C., a weak front accompanying this outbreak gave mixed rain and snow to many areas. While little change is expected for the north coast and the interior for the next 2 days, the south coast can look forward to a clearing trend as the precipitation is forced out by drier air from the interior.

Last ditch try to avert strike

Negotiators said talks with mediator Clark Gilmour are going on today.

The province's 12,500 general hospital registered nurses voted 98 per cent last week in favor of striking to back up demands for a substantial inflation catch-up and salary increase. However, the union has not served 72-hour strike notice against the 113 hospitals represented by Health Labor Relations.

Meanwhile, members of the Hospital Employees Union, which represents about 20,000 practical nurses, orderlies, clerical and laundry workers, cleaning staff and cooks at 105 health care institutions in B.C., have ratified a new contract giving them a 25.5-per-cent general wage increase over two years, a union leader said.

Jack Gerow did not reveal the vote percentage but said union negotiators received strong support from the membership.

The hospital employees received a 9.5-per-cent wage increase retroactive to Jan. 1, eight per cent Aug. 1 this year and another eight per cent Aug. 1, 1981.

Forests budget rise aimed at seedling survival rate

The forests ministry will increase its budget for reforestation by one-third this year to $21 million, Forests Minister Tom Waterland said Tuesday.

Waterland, responding to reports that the survival rate of tree seedlings was less than it should be, said reforestation in B.C. is a very complex subject.

"We have a wide variety of tree species, climatic conditions, altitude conditions and our reforestation is much more complex than most areas," he said.

Government reports indicate reforestation in some parts of the province is so difficult the death rate of tree seedlings in some plantations has been more than 50 per cent.

However, Bill Young, B.C.'s chief forester, and Chris Thompson, regional research officer for the Nelson forest district, said Monday the survival rates have improved recently because of the amount of research being done.

Waterland said research spending will be increased this year so that improvement can be continued.

"In areas we have failure rates of about 50 per cent but our average is about 85 per cent survival which is good," he said. "I don't think too many countries in the world exceed that."

The provincial government currently provides all of the seedlings used in the province, but recently announced plans would allow private companies to develop seedlings. MacMillan Bloedel hopes to be using all its own seedlings by 1985.

Dr. Jack Walters, head of the University of B.C. research forest in Haney, said the university has recently embarked on a program with the B.C. Forest Service to develop better quality seedlings and to improve planting methods.

Walters said one of the problems in the past has been that the forest service has tried to use the same type of seedlings in different areas of the province.

"Until about five years ago, most of the planting had been done on the coast, now most of it is being done in the Interior; that's quite a shift."

Walters said new planting techniques must be developed taking into account climate conditions, soil and other factors and greater care must be taken in checking planting quality.

2nd narrows bridge open

VANCOUVER (CP) — The rail link between the north and south shores of Vancouver harbor was restored Tuesday nearly five months after a freighter rammed a Canadian National Railways' bridge at the second narrows of Burrard Inlet.

Although the CNR eventually managed to reroute all but five per cent of the bridge's normal traffic, the closure cost millions of dollars in losses to north shore industries dependent on the railway.

One woodchip exporter claims to have lost $7.6 million in business while the bridge was shut down for repairs. Several lawsuits are pending against the owners of the errant freighter, the 24,000-ton Japan Erica.

Bid for legal work probed

KAMLOOPS (CP) — A letter to an MP from Kamloops lawyer Dave Rogers asking for federal government legal work will be examined by the Law Society of British Columbia.

George Cummings, chairman of the society's discipline committee which watches professional conduct among the group's 4,000 members, said the matter is on the committee's agenda for March 17.

Rogers was Progressive Conservative finance chairman for the campaign to elect Don Cameron in the Kamloops-Shuswap riding in the May 22 federal election. In the letter, Rogers asked for federal legal work for his support in the candidate's successful bid for the seat.

Town seeks halt to Kemano II

HAZELTON (CP) — This community in northwest B.C. is the latest to call for a halt of the proposed Kemano II hydroelectric development.

The village passed a resolution at a recent meeting requesting work on the hydroelectric development by the Aluminum Co. of Canada be halted until a provincial judicial inquiry is held.

In a letter to Kitimat council, Hazelton Mayor Alice Maitland said it is no longer acceptable to treat northwest B.C. as a resource frontier "to be exploited without the consent or serious consultation with the people who call this area home."

Fecal levels high at beach

Dr. David Clarke also says the source of the bacteria, found in human and animal excrement, is a mystery.

Goldberg new electoral chief

Diphtheria scare in B.C.

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A diphtheria scare at a local school led Tuesday to the setting up of a special immunization clinic but parents are worried the highly-contagious disease might spread.

The clinic was set up at Hart Highway elementary school here after a six-year-old boy was taken to hospital, apparently with the disease, and six other persons have been diagnosed as carriers.

Children who have missed shots and older children requiring boosters received needles Tuesday while parents and teachers may go to the school Thursday for booster shots.

But many Grade 1 children have been kept home by their parents, who fear the disease is a threat and the school should be temporarily closed.

Diphtheria was virtually wiped out in the 1950s when immunization was provided free to all children and antibiotics were available for treatment. It is transmitted by close contact, talking, coughing and kissing.

Symptoms include a sore throat and fever which untreated produces a disease membrane at the back of the throat. Eventually, the toxin in the membrane can get into the blood and may cause heart failure.

Aside from the case in Prince George, there is only one other in British Columbia, in the northeastern community of Fort St. John.

Cory Harris, the Grade 1 boy from Prince George who has contracted the disease, came down with it in the last week of February. Tests showed that five other children and teacher Rosemary Mallory were carriers and they are being cared for at home.

While some parents are frightened and angry at the situation, school officials have been downplaying the outbreak. Of 287 children in the school, 48 were absent Tuesday.

Tom Pidcock, the school's principal, said he is not asking the Grade 1 children to stay home.

Womens' rights on rights group?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The mostly-male British Columbia Human Rights Commission was asked Tuesday whether the men would surrender their seats to women in the name of human rights.

However, commissioners refused to take a stand.

The question of female representation on the provincially-appointed group was raised by the public at a commission meeting here in light of an announcement that one of two women on the 12-member commission has resigned.

Members of the audience of about 20 persons asked whether commissioners would endorse a recommendation to increase female representation to 50 per cent of the commission and to urge the appointment of members with extensive experience in human rights.

Half of the commissioners' terms expire in August. The remainder hold appointments until August, 1981.

Increasing the number of female commissioners was one of 108 recommendations contained in a summary of a human rights conference held in Vancouver in December. The report on the conference, sponsored by the commission, the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews and the Secretary of State, was released at Tuesday's meeting.

Unsung alternatives I

Hundreds, maybe thousands of researchers and backyard tinkerers across North America are searching for methods to extract energy from renewable sources. Wind, tides, sunlight and waste can all contribute to easing society's thirst for non-renewable hydrocarbons.

Yet it seems these alternate sources have little hope of aiding western society make the massive and inevitable transition to a non-oil based economy and energy self-sufficiency.

Coal and uranium are still in forefront of many experts' minds as being a logical answer. However, the air pollution from coal-burning electrical generating plants and the waste disposal and safety problems with nuclear power plants have created looming environmental barriers.

While solutions are being sought to these problems, other scientists are doggedly working on technologies to produce huge and safe amounts of both electricity and a replacement for gasoline. The process for the first is nuclear fusion; the second would involve the use of hydrogen. Yet despite the promise held by both technologies, the Canadian and U.S. governments are so far spending little money on advancing them.

Fusion is the reverse of the process used by today's nuclear fission plants. While fission involves splitting atoms and harnessing released energy, fusion means crushing atoms together until they fuse into a heavier atom and then capturing energy. Scientists say fusion can provide inexhaustible quantities of electricity without dangerous by-products and the resulting waste disposal problems.

Fusion research has been on going in many countries for 30 years. But only in the last few years has the state of the art, so to speak, advanced to the point where the oil-importing countries are starting to take it seriously.

The problem has been temperature. Fusion requires very high temperatures, similiar to those found on the sun. In fact it is fusion which keeps the sun hot. Heat of up to 100 million degrees Celsius must be generated. At the moment temperatures of between 50 and 80 million degress are being regularly produced at Princeton University by passing powerful electric currents through low pressure gas. The current heats the gas and at the same time creates a magnetic field which provides thermal insulation so that the holding vessel is not burned.

Dr. John Clark, deputy director of the U.S. Office of Fusion energy does not see much difficulty in moving from 70 million to 100 million degrees, and he says it would be technologically possible to produce a demonstration plant within 10 to 12 years. But he says no nation is putting enough energy and money into fusion power development to adhere to that schedule.

Clark says that under an accelerated program it would cost about $10 billion to overcome remaining technical problems and build a power producing plant. The cost, he believes, is reasonable considering higher space research and defence budgets.

The U.S. government for its part has increased the fusion research budget by $24 million to $417 million for 1981 and the best estimate now is that a working model will be built around the turn of the century.

Although Canadian fusion research is nowhere near the scale of that south of the border, a core of scientists at the University of Toronto is working on material and engineering problems. They argue that Canadians could develop expertise and technology that will put them in demand as fusion emerges from theory to practice. But so far Ottawa has only come up with a $250,000 grant to determine how Canada should get involved in fusion.

A willingness by government and the public to commit larger sums of money to rapid fusion development could hasten the day of energy self-sufficency. It is the same reluctance, that is holding back development of hydrogen as an energy source.

Tomorrow: Unsung alternatives II.

The pathfinders

Footpaths and trails through wooded and green areas are a nice alternative to road shoulders and concrete sidewalks. In semi-rural and urban areas these paths are generally left-overs from days of sparser population, days when footpaths and trails were used a shortcuts between two points. There are many such paths on southern Vancouver Island, but as a dispute in Cordova Bay demonstrates, urban development is taking its toll. The reason is that a good percentage of the paths traverse private property.

Residents near the Walema footpath claim that Saanich council should take all the steps necessary to preseve it. However, 20 metres of the trail crosses property recently purchased by people who intend to build on it. Naturally their right to privacy would be compromised by a path that slices the property in half.

So far, council and neighborhood land owners have been unable to agree on a proposed solution of moving the path so it runs adjacent to property boundaries. Council is reluctant to expropriate.

Unless conucil adopts an overall policy of preserving footpaths, many will be lost as fallow land is developed. One homeowner who spoke in favor of the Walema path said that three footpaths have been lost within a quarter mile of her residence.

Footpaths can enhance the quality of life offered by a neighborhood but they should not be provided at the expense of private land owners. If council and residents feel strongly enough, an inventory of existing paths and plans for future connecting paths should be undertaken. Although it would take years, the municipality could begin acquiring the necessary rights-of-way, either through conscessions from subdividers or by purchasing the land.

RICHARD GWYN

A cabinet Pierre can steer

OTTAWA — Pierre Trudeau's cabinet differs from its predecessors not so much in its personalities — fewer than half are new — as in its shape. It has three, uneven, sides.

One side leans to the left. One side leans away from the West. The third side folds down, and thus leaves Trudeau all the room he needs to do what he wants about those things — international affairs, the constitution — he cares most about.

The leftward lean starts at the top. To guess the kind of Finance Minister that Allan J. MacEachen will turn out to be, you need to know that as a student and professor at St. Francis Xavier University he absorbed the tenants of social Catholicism known as the Antigonish Movement, that he demonstrated these during a term as Minister of Health in the mid-'60s when he enacted Medicare, and that he reconfirmed them last December when he provided the defeat of Joe Clark's government on the issue of the "short-term pain for long-term gain" budget.

Economic priority

"Reduction of the deficit and the cost of debt interest charges are matters of concern," MacEachen told reporters after his swearing-in, "but there are other matters of economic concern to be addressed."

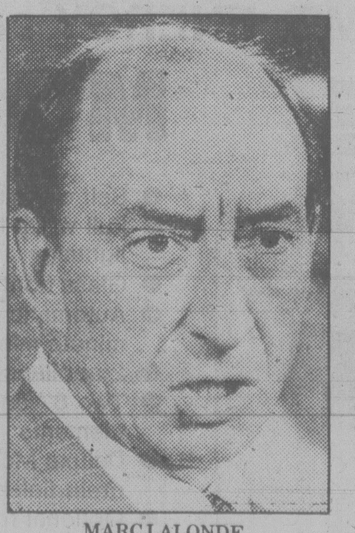
Some of these matters will be addressed by Energy Minister Marc Lalonde, and others — foreign ownership, an industrial strategy — by Industry, Trade and Commerce Minister Herb Gray. Both bring to their portfolios the same reformist credentials as does MacEachen.

As a peace offering to the right, [illegible] many Bay Street brokers from leaping out of buildings, Trudeau has named Don Johnstone, a Montreal tax expert, as President of the Treasury Board. He's a cabinet newcomer, though, up against a line of veterans. Watch for smaller taxes, and bigger deficits.

The lean away from the West is almost as marked. In contrast to Clark, which went to the limit to compensate for his lack of Quebec MPs, Trudeau has taken only a half-step toward the west.

Of the two available Liberal western MPs, only one, Lloyd Axworthy, made into the cabinet, and he into a portfolio, Manpower and Immigration, that deals with little that interests westerners between Vancouver and the Lakehead.

As did Clark, Trudeau searched for substitutes in the Senate. He found three takers there — Senators Ray Perrault, Bud Olson and Hazen Argue — but gave none important responsibilities.



MARC LALONDE
. . . no friend of West

The responsibility the west cares most about, Trudeau gave to the cabinet minister the west cares least for — Energy Minister Lalonde. By picking Lalonde, who drafted the Liberals' election energy policy, Trudeau in effect has signalled the west he intends to pick a fight with it, over oil. Watch for sparks to fly soon between Edmonton and Ottawa.

The cabinet's last side is built to Trudeau's personal specifications.

To be responsible for the constitution, about which Trudeau cares deeply, he picked Justice Minister Jean Chretien, who knows little about the subject but who does know a great deal about political campaigning, which, until the Quebec referendum is done and is won, will be Chretien's charge. Once the referendum is over, and the constitutional debate returns, watch for Chretien to hand his charge back to Trudeau.

Last say

Watch for the same thing happen, right away, with international affairs. For External Affairs, the cabinet's plum portfolio, Trudeau picked a cabinet newcomer, Mark MacGuigan, which is roughly the political equivalent to drawing inside to a royal, straight flush. A well-regarded and studious MP from Windsor who missed out earlier a half-dozen times on appointments to cabinet, MacGuigan's main role in international affairs is likely to be to act as an advance scout for Trudeau's own trips abroad.

Trudeau, thus, has shaped a cabinet that fits his own designs during his last three years or so as prime minister.

He has given to himself the last say on the constitution and on international affairs. He has given to the cabinet's progressives the chance to see if they can manage the economy, and to take the responsibility themselves if they fare any worse than did cabinet conservatives such as former Finance Minister John Turner through the '70s. Lastly, he has told the West that until it switches to him, he's prepared to fight it.

How the cabinet will shape up is impossible to predict. Beyond any question, though, it has the most unusual shape of any that Trudeau has assembled.

Regulate polls

During the recent federal election campaign, I was greatly disturbed by the flood of public opinion polls which appeared regularly in the press. These purported to show which party was leading and by how much.

In my opinion, such polls should be banned during any election campaign in this country. My reason is that they tend to influence the popular vote, especially among that segment of the voting public who may be undecided, uninformed or uninterested. We can do without this kind of influence in an election since this is the sole reponsibility and prerogative of the parties concerned — and of them only.

I was pleased to read in your paper that Allan McKinnon shares this view. I am sure we both hope that, in future elections, the opinion of the citizens of this country with respect to the outcome of an election will only be known and published after such election is held. — H. D. Heavysege, 159 Cook Street.

We should go

Now that the XIIIth Winter Olympic Games have concluded, it would be a privilege to pay tribute to our Canadian competitors, all or whom, despite bad luck, played so well and tried so hard. Perhaps that terse but resolute ejaculation, uttered by a Canadian bobsled-team member after a particularly disappointing run: "Go for the next? You're bloody well right we will — are you kidding? this is the Olympics!" — sums up the tough competitive spirit involved.

The U.S. Olympic Committee must be largely held responsible for achieving success in mounting such a complex series of events at Lake Placid.

As to the United States government, its boycott of the upcoming Summer Games appears both indefensible and hypocritical (well calculated as it may be to return the Carter administration to office next November).

If political considerations justify debilitating international sporting events, then Lake Placid as the site of the Winter Games deserved to be boycotted just as strenuously as Moscow, the site for the Summer Games, is being boycotted now.

I thought Lord Killanin's closing remarks at Lake Placid highly appropriate, to wit that purely sporting events like the Olympics, featuring young athletes from around the globe, generate a spirit, albeit competitive, of geniune friendship and co-operation, a spirit which may just help avert the nuclear holocaust which casts its macabre shadow over even our joyful moments.

I confidently hope to see Canada compete at the Olympics this summer. We went to Lake Placid; why not to Moscow? In my opinion, the new federal government should guarantee our participation. — Robin Terry, 208-1180 Colville Road.

CN replies

I would like the opportunity to try to repair at least some to the damage to the good reputation of Canadian railways — of which Canadian National is a major part — undoubltedly caused by the article written by Professor Julius Lukasiewicz and headed "The National Nightmare", which appeared in Canadian Weekend of Feb. 9.

Lukasiewicz gives a highly distorted picture of the Canadian railway industry. And further distortion is added by the editors of Canadian Weekend through the use of a sensational title.

As the head of CN Rail — a Canadian railway which is fast, efficient and safe — I resent such sweeping, irresponsible and unfounded statements. Statements which may indeed carry the burden of the professor's message but which are certainly not backed up by the argument or the inconsistent presentation of "statistics" in the body of the article.

Almost all of the statistical comparisons the professor makes among North American railways or between North American railways and railways in other parts of the world are questionable.

For example, his indictment of Canadian railways is supported by the statement "In terms of the traffic carried, there were twice as many derailments (in North America) in 1977 as in 1960."

The accepted railway statistic is gross ton miles, an exact quanitification of "the traffic carried."

Based on this figure, the ratio of accidents of all kinds (even the most trivial, one-wheel-off-the-rail kind) to billion gross ton miles on CN Rail lines has decreased from 20.63 in 1972, when we began such detailed record keeping, to 6.05 in 1979.

That is a bona fide Canadian statistic which, far from reflecting a doubling of derailments, underlines the steady decline in the overall accident rate that has characterized CN Rail's operations in recent years. This is a direct reflection of the fact that CN Rail's track and equipment are in the best condition in the company's history. And while I cannot speak for other Canadian railways, it is only fair to say that the safety records of the major ones probably reflect a similar situation.

Another example: writing about "our case", presumably the Canadian case, the professor states that the "lines are inadequately protected, for instance, from snow and rock slides. In 1975 alone there were more than 40 derailments in the Rockies." The implication is clear that the Canadian railways had 40 derailments due to snow or rock slides in 1975. The facts are that in 1975 CN Rail had one derailment because of rock slide and one because of snow slide. We have no reason to believe that Canada's other major railway through the Rockies had significantly different results from ours that year.

The article is replete with such misinformation.

No one is quite sure by what authority the editors of Canadian Weekend have annointed Professor Lukasiewicz as "an expert on the Canadian rail system." His credentials as given are "professor of mechanical and aeronautical engineering at Carleton University."

He is, of course, entitled to hold forth about railways as much as he wishes. But editors concerned with the reputation of their publications should make sure that he knows whereof he writes. And railway people proud of their skills, experience, dedication and performance resent the unfounded implications contained in this and other public utterances of Professor Lukasiewicz. — R. E. Lawless, President, CN Rail.

Shed the yoke

Quebec voted a tribal ticket — 73 out of 74 seats for their own French-Canadian leader Pierre Trudeau.

Ontario voted in a completely different direction than the West, which is not surprising. The history of prosperous Ontario exploiting the have-not Western provinces goes back a long way.

Now that Western Canada has fought its way into an era of prosperity, Ontario in its consistent contempt for the Western provinces has aligned itself with Quebec to form a "regional dictatorship" over Western Canada.

The differences in the attitude of Western people, regional needs, traditions and customs, is making it absolutely impossible to continue in a Confederation.

Western Canada has such a great future to look forward to once we shed the oppressive yoke of the Quebec/Ontario domination.

The only direction we can go in now is out of Confederation and into the nation of Western Canada.

The separatists in Quebec understand where they have to go, so it is in the interest of Western Canada to support the establishment of an independent Quebec state. Once Quebec has cut the cord, then the way is clear to form an "Independent Western Canada". — Robert L. Henshaw, 2231 Government Street.

Support hospitals

Being somewhat a veteran of stays in Canadian hospitals, I feel that I should counter some of the adverse publicity the "Old Girl" has recently had. I had surgery there, and was out within 48 hours, the nursing staff was attentive, highly professional, friendly, and even interested! The support staff of physicians were obviously excellent as well and I was out fast, freeing up a needed bed. The Royal Jubilee has a big job to get on with. Let's support this fine hospital, not continually harp about the past.

Well done! — Jeff Williams, 2340 Howard Street.

A wheelchair is just something you sit in

By MARCIANNE MILLER
The Los Angeles Times

The boy sat at his bedroom window all day, waiting. At last it was time for the other kids to get out of school and race past his window to the baseball field on the corner. "Danny! Buddy!" the boy called. "Hey guys!" They paused, looked back at him. "I'm back home!" he shouted. He waited, but they didn't answer him. They ran away.

The boy stared after them. "Scaredy cats!" he yelled. Then he cried.

The boy was my big brother Bobby. Before he got polio, he had been the best pitcher on Raymond Street. He used to hold my hand when we crossed the street, and beat up the other kids when they pulled my pigtails. Now his legs wouldn't move.

I tried to sneak away, but he caught me. He grabbed my wrist, and pulled my face so close to his that I could see the tears in his eyes. "Don't tell them!" he ordered. "Don't ever let them know they made me cry!"

Then he pulled the curtains closed, and wheeled his chair into a corner.

That was the day I learned what it meant to be "crippled." It meant that you couldn't be part of the gang anymore. It meant that there wasn't a pill for what hurt the most.

Twenty-five years later, the kids have grown up, but not much else has changed.

It's not architectural barriers that pose the greatest obstacle to the handicapped. The real barrier can't be seen or bumped into. And it can't be legislated away. The real barrier is an invisible emotional wall. Until this wall is recognized and understood, the so-called "wheelchair-power" movement will roll no farther than to the edge of the curb.

The 32 million physically disabled North Americans are the only group who acquire their minority status through a twist of fate. A disabled person threatens us because he challenges our conviction that we control our own lives. He is a graphic reminder of our vulnerability. A wheelchair makes us admit that "it could happen to me." Because we'd rather not think such disturbing thoughts, we build a wall to "protect" ourselves.

We avoid any close physical contact with a disabled person, as if by staying far enough away we won't "catch" what he has or have his bad luck rub off on us.

This fear is irrational, but it is real and powerful. I've heard the conversation in a room full of people stop dead when a wheelchair-bound person comes through the door. I've seen a mother grab her child and rush to the other side of the street to avoid passing a disabled veteran. I've had dinner invitations refused because people were afraid to sit at the same table with my handicapped roommate. "I'll give you a cheque," I've been told when trying to drum up support for a benefit, "but just don't ask me to meet any of them."

Another tactic is to separate ourselves mentally. We unconsciously depersonalize a disabled person by focusing so much attention on the disability that we fail to distinguish between it and the person himself. We make him an object of our pity. Or assign a "helpless" label, forcing our assistance when it is not asked. We act as if a physical limitation implies a mental deficiency as well; we talk more slowly, smile a lot. Add insult to injury.

If we meet a competent, independent disabled person, our tendency to dissociate from him can be even worse. We attribute superhuman qualities to him, assuming that just because he is dealing with his limitation he must be more courageous and more admirable than we could ever be in the same situation. We put him on a pedestal, far above our reach.

Fear of the handicapped is so pervasive that even the handicapped themselves are afraid of the handicapped. There's the legally blind woman who won't let her neighbors see her use a white cane, the hard-of-hearing businessman who refuses to wear a hearing aid, the "less disabled than thou" people like the young man who refused to be introduced to any other disabled persons because he wasn't "like them."

It is true that the handicapped person often helps build the wall of separation. He develops a thick skin. Behind his barrier he can ignore the outside world, maintain his dignity, feel no shame for being unlucky. He hides, too.

There are those who say that the handicapped will achieve equal rights only when they stop hiding and start raising their fists. Others insist that the able-bodied majority must provide the initiative for change. Although these approaches have merit, they are too broad and intellectual to do more than scratch the surface of the emotional obstacles that go much, much deeper than politics.

Only individuals can break down the wall of fear and resentment that divides the able-bodied and the disabled. Only when this barrier has crumbled will there be clear ground for a meeting of minds.

But how do we break the barrier?

While still in the second grade, my brother suggested a way to begin in his "Things I Wish For" assignment in English class:

"I wish I didn't have polio anymore. But if I have to have it, then I wish people would stop talking to me like I was wheelchair. I'm not a wheelchair! It's just something I sit in. I still feel like a baseball pitcher.

"I really get mad when people are afraid of me. I wish they would just tell me they're scared, then I would tell them, 'that's okay, I was scared, too. I'm okay now, see? I won't hurt you.' "

It was still just a hockey game

By JOHN JEANSONNE
Newsday

'Simple-minded jingoism' in Lake Placid arena?

This is the way the United States' Olympic hockey victory was packaged and presented, on the whole: Love it, but don't leave it as just a hockey victory.

The front page of the Boston Herald American preached: "In the end it was more than an Olympic hockey game . . . instead it became an event that lifted the spirits of Americans everywhere as a band of gritty young players . . . proved to be YANKEE DOODLE DANDIES."

ABC-TV's Jim McKay, sounding close to tears, closed the Olympic coverage by referring to the victories of Eric Heiden and the hockey team and proclaiming: "What an Olympics! What a country! Let's say it here: We are a great people!"

Huge assumptions were made following the hockey team's startling, emotional accomplishment. It was assumed that the hard-earned victory by a small group of hockey players and their officials — all white and all from just a handful of Northern and Northeastern states — somehow stood for the way of life of all Americans; that the Mexican-Americans living in shacks in El Paso and the Indians stuck on reservations in Arizona and the blacks in East St. Louis actually had new horizons opened to them because of this gold medal.

The gold medal. For a couple of months now, the Carter administration has gone to great lengths to note the clear insignificance of a sports title compared to the bigger issues of lives endangered in Afghanistan and the national security. Everyone agreed, too. Polls overwhelmingly favored a U.S. boycott of the Moscow Olympics this summer.

Yet the administration completely redefined the value of a gold medal at the Lake Placid Olympics, expounding on the implications (assumptions, really) of a U.S. hockey victory over the Soviets. Carter twice phoned his congratulations to coach Herb Brooks, after the victory over the Soviets and again after the win over Finland to lock up the gold medal, and called the players, "American heroes."

Debbie Green, training for the Summer Olympics with the U.S. women's volleyball team in Colorado Springs, Colo., noticed the hypocrisy. "The athletes at the Winter Games get all the praise for their work," she says, "and now just because our Games are in Moscow, we're accused of being un-American for wanting to compete."

The assumed connection between Brooks' well-prepared, enthusiastic team and the U.S. Way of Life doesn't exist. "It is simple-minded jingoism," says Jeff Goldstein, professor of psychology at Temple University and editor of Sports, Games and Play. "Because of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan preceded by the Iran situation, these Olympics were even more politicized by the U.S. than ever before. I believe that for the other countries, the Germans and the French and so forth, there was no extra politicization. But the U.S. was looking for a way of expressing superiority and anger."

So the Soviets were waved in front of U.S. citizens as a red cape is waved in front of a bull. With the opposition dehumanized a little — perceived to be an inferior species — Jim McKay can get away with calling us "a great people" simply on the basis of some sports victories.

In Philadelphia, a veteran sports columnist wrote that the "first rule of journalism is don't root. Don't be a homer. Don't be a house man." But then he added that, under these circumstances, it was okay to cheer in the press box for the U.S. team. So much for impartial journalism.

There is no denying the size of the U.S.'s hockey upset; the Soviets had beaten the U.S. 10-3 two weeks before and have been regarded as the Olympic favorite since 1956 (the only other time they lost an Olympic gold since then was in 1960, when the U.S. pulled a similar upset.) There is no denying the emotion and electricity of the event, nor that U.S. spectators would latch on to their team as any fan would.

"One of the chapters in the book I edited dealt with how people watching a sports event always chose a favorite team or player to give meaning to the event," Goldstein says. "They showed people videotapes of different tennis players, players they couldn't identify. Within five minutes, the people had chosen a favorite, for whatever reason. Sports seems to be more interesting only when you have someone to pull for. I think that's understandable. But if you care too much for a favorite, that's when you're no longer able to appreciate the sports for what they are, aesthetically.

"To me, it's deplorable that sports are used as a test of national strength. The sports victory of a national team has no connection to our society. Those boxscores of the medal counts show only which country has won the most medals; they don't take into account how many athletes participate in a particular sport for each country, or what a country's population is. Of course, in a political sense, it's symbolic. It's even understandable that people look for some sign of strength through something like a hockey victory.

"But in a sense, they're grasping at straws, and the straws aren't there. The Russians didn't pull their troops out of Afghanistan because they lost the hockey game."

What a man's got to do

Russell Baker

NEW YORK — While entering a Brooklyn subway the other day, Alexander Hudson was shot by a man wielding a bow and arrow. The wound was not fatal.

Neither — so far — have been any of the wounds inflicted on subway riders by a man with a meat cleaver. His operating method is to extract the cleaver from a paper bag when a train stops at the platform, swing at a couple of passengers selected at random and run.

In New York police parlance, people like the bow-and-arrow man and the meat-cleaver man are called "perpetrators." At times their perpetrations become fatal, as one did last week when a prepetrator, detained by a policeman for trying to cheat the subway turnstile of a fare, grabbed the policeman's gun and shot him six times.

Another form of perpetration consists of pushing or hurling subway riders from a station platform into the path of an oncoming train. This has become a disturbingly popular activity among perpetrators during the past year or so. Occasionally an athletic subway rider escapes with nothing graver than a few fractures by clawing back on to the platform before the train can do its work, but severe mutilation and death are more commonplace.

It is also possible in the subway to be deliberately murdered by mistake. This occurred earlier this winter to a passenger standing at a subway station under the Broadway theatre district. While waiting for a train, he saw a man dash down the steps, race across the tracks and disappear. The next moment, he was confronted by the fleeing man's pursuer and a pistol.

After his removal to the morgue, the police explained that the perpetrator had surely made a dreadful mistake in that he had not meant to shoot a subway rider at all but thought he was dispatching the running man who had merely used the subway station as an escape hatch. Both runner and perpetrator escaped to use the subway another day.

Now and then subway riders become sick and tired of perpetrators. Just recently an entire subway car full of early morning riders — mostly men — found itself being robbed by a perpetrator brandishing a hunting knife with a seven-inch blade. This galled them so that when the perpetrator debarked at the next station they pursued, felled and captured him for the police.

Being subway riders, they will not be surprised to look up some sleepy morning any day now and find him perpetrating again with a blade at their throats. It is the conviction of all subway riders that perpetrators are never convicted, but that their punishment consists in a judge's sending a stern note home to their mothers.

This, substantially, was the fate of a large group of perpetrators rounded up by the law in the Times Square station this winter after dashing about in gang frenzy, robbing and terrifying subway customers en masse. Most were adolescents seized by the fever of pack perpetration, not an unusual phenomenon in the Times Square area; most were released with bad report cards by the juvenile court system. None suffered jailing.

Considering all this, why do I continue to ride the subways? Even the police now say they are too dangerous for a cop to patrol without a companion cop to protect his back. I can answer the question best with other questions.

Why does the toreador confront the bull? Why does the hunter face the charging lion? Why does the bomber crew rise again to face the flak over Bremerhaven?

It is not easy to feel like a hero these days, but when I head for the subway, I feel myself walking a little bit straighter, my jaw setting in a firmer line, my primitive animal reflexes becoming tauter.

In five years in the subways I have acquired skills — professionalism — of which I am proud. I am an aging man, like Willie Stargell, but there is a fine pleasure, as there must be for Stargell, in testing myself to find whether the wisdom and experience is still enough to compensate for the loss of quickness.

I feel confidence as I submerge at 42d Street and brush past the man at the foot of the steps with his chant of "Acid and grass, acid and grass, acid and grass."

Inside I am cautious about avoiding eye contact, which can lead to critical encounters with roving maniacs. On the platform, I cunningly stay back from the rails, pretending to notice no one, but sizing up everyone. I keep distance from men carrying paper bags which may conceal meat cleavers, .357 magnums. If someone runs, I slide discreetly behind an upright steel beam and grasp it firmly against the possibility of being shoved onto the rails.

When the train arrives, I do not enter the cars in which the lights are out or in which too many of the doors refuse to open.

At my destination, confronting a 300-yard walk along an abandoned tunnel illuminated with a 10-watt bulb, I roll my newspaper so tightly it becomes a murderous spear and, swinging it aggressively, stride through the gloom like Bogart walking down a mean street. When I emerge whole, I feel complete and alive again and a true New Yorker.

Bonds

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were sharply lower in moderate trading on the Canadian bond market Tuesday as a the U.S. prime rates increased to a record of 17¼ from 16¾ per cent.

The short end of the market dropped 10 cents. Mid-, long-term, and provincial issues fell one point. Corporates issues fell three-quarters of a point.

Selling pressure intensified as last week's rally continued to fade when anticipated anti-inflation actions in the United States, such as credit-controls, did not appear.

Watch gold index!

The Canadian Press

Shares of major Canadian gold producers still have lots of potential to move higher, a Winnipeg analyst says.

David James of Richardson Securities of Canada said in a recent interview that gold shares have not yet achieved their potential arising from the huge increase in the price of gold on world markets.

From Jan. 3, 1979, when the price of gold at London closed at $218.60 U.S., it shot up almost four times to a high of $850 on Jan. 21. Meanwhile, the gold index on the Toronto stock market climbed only about 2.4 times, from about 1,424 points on Jan. 3, 1979, to a high of about 3,535 at the end of February of this year.

Since late January, gold prices have fallen to about $600 to $650 U.S. James said he does not see much further downside potential for the price.

James said part of the reason why gold stocks did not match the rise in the bullion price was that the performance of other resource stocks, notably oils, has been so spectacular it has been a competitive force.

"We could see up to a 50-per-cent gain in the gold index in 1980 from present levels," he said.

James pointed to five companies who should achieve record earnings this year, he said.

First among them is Dome Mines Ltd. of Toronto, Canada's senior gold-mining company which holds controlling intersst in Campbell Red Lake Mines Ltd. of Toronto and Sigma Mines (Quebec) Ltd. of Val d'Or, Que., along with a large interest in Dome Petroleum Ltd. of Calgary.

James said he expects Dome Mines' earnings this year will jump to between $5 and $6 a share from an estimated $3.40 a share in 1979.

City eyes terminal troubles

They liked the idea of a down-to-earth, downtown multi-use transportation terminal but Victoria aldermen were hostile Tuesday to Airwest Airlines' plea for a different sort of terminal for its waterfront float plane service.

The first idea was Ald. John Cooper's. He recently proposed that the Urban Transit Authority, which is looking for a new bus terminal in Victoria, build on the vacant block immediately east of city hall.

"Where does council stand on this very important issue?" Cooper asked the members of his traffic and highway planning committee.

Ald. Bob Wright said he backed the general concept of a downtown terminal but couldn't support the specific site Cooper wanted, especially as the UTA will report at the end of the month on its findings.

"We would be sticking our neck out if we endorsed this proposal. I think it's crazy."

Cooper replied that Mayor Bill Tindall made the Blanshard and Pandora terminal site a major plank in his election platform last November, and VIA Rail was on record in favor of a downtown multi-use terminal.

Ald. Bill McElroy said Wright's arguments had some validity and proposed an amendment to Cooper's motion which carried unanimously. The committee asked council to endorse the general concept and "take a look" at the particular site mentioned by Cooper.

In the air, meanwhile, Airwest was shot down in its first sortie at renewing its lease on a piece of city property on the Inner Harbor. Its present two-year lease runs out June 1 and Airwest wants a new 10-year term with a five-year renewal option.

This would allow the airline to build a terminal in keeping with the Inner Harbor architecture and which would enhance the visual pleasure of the area, said managing director W.R. Harris.

Airwest also held out the promise that if its plans to purchase West Coast Air go ahead, the two lines will be consolidated and fewer planes will use the harbor.

But council's land-use planning committee held to the policy established two years ago — Airwest's tenure at Ship Point is strictly temporary — and members voted to ask the company to show cause why it should be granted a 10-year lease.

Pilot dies as plane flips over

A 47-year-old Campbell River pilot died Tuesday when his Cessna 172 float plane flipped over in the waters of Bute Inlet north of Campbell River.

Officials were at the scene today investigating the accident and death of Walter Kirk.

Kirk left Campbell River about noon Monday with his son, Roger, 19, and Wayne Whelan, 20, also of Campbell River.

The spokesman said Kirk had put his son and Whelan ashore before the plane flipped.

Crystal to open March 28

The Crystal Garden opens March 28 with a gala, invitation-only party, followed by a week of free admission for the public, the Provincial Capital Commission said today.

An arboretum and aviary now occupy the glass-roofed building originally built by the CPR in 1924 for a salt water swimming pool, tea room and dance floor.

A row of specialty shops has been added along the Douglas Street side and a restaurant called Rattenbury's is going in at the south end of the Crystal.

The first store, Fiddlesticks ice cream and candy shop, opened last weekend. Others will specialize in fine clothing, Canadian art, antiques, Polish handicrafts and Canadian-made souvenirs. There will also be a photo finishing store.

The deep tiled pool where several generations of Victorians learned to swim has been partly filled with earth and hundreds of tropical plants now flourish there. An artificial stream flows the length of the pool from an ornate fountain at the south end.

Wicker and rattan furniture similar to the original tables and chairs have been placed around the second floor gallery.

The provincial government spent more than $2.75 million renovating the brick building, which is usually attributed to Legislative Buildings architect Francis Rattenbury, who also designed the Empress Hotel and the old Vancouyver courthouse.

But the Crystal was largely the work of his lesser known partner, P.L. James. He designed an ingenious concrete raft to "float" the building on the marshy fill.

In the renovations, all the roof glass was replaced and two elevators were added for customers and freight.

Former Universiy of Victoria gardener Rex Murfitt was hired as the Crystal's head gardener while bird expert Don Adams, formerly manager of the SPCA in Victoria, is curator of birds.

After the free week, visitors to the Crystal will have to pay $2 admission, students and children aged six to 16 will pay $1. Senior citizens will get in free in the winter months, but will pay the regular admission from April 1 to Oct. 31.

Marsh 'conscientious' fetus-death trial told

A former head of obstetrics at both Victoria hospitals Tuesday praised a woman accused of criminal negligence causing the death of a fetus in a home childbirth.

Dr. Charles H. Borsman, called as an expert witness by the defence, testified at the county court trial of Margaret Lillian Marsh, 52, of Sooke, charged in the death of Nigel Ambery in the Saanich home of Elizabeth Ambery, July 12, 1978.

Witnesses for the Crown completed their evidence last fall and the case was adjourned to this week before Judge Peter Millward.

In a precedent-setting ruling handed down last November, Judge Millward ruled that a fetus in the process of birth is a person as the law of criminal negligence applies.

Borsman, a specialist in obstetrics and gynecology, said he is unalterably opposed to home childbirths.

But he said he can not speak too highly of Marsh,, whom he had known in Victoria as a medical colleague when she was a general practitioner for 16 years between 1955 and 1971.

Borsman described Marsh as "a generous, unselfish, considerate, conscientious practitioner — extremely kind".

In answer to a hypothetical question from defence counsel Peter Leask, Borsman said even the most competent physician might miss a breech position in prenatal examination of an expectant mother.

Earlier evidence was that the fetus appeared from the womb feet-first — a form of breech birth — and that death was due to cerebral hemorrhage from torn skull tissue, a cause associated with breech births.

Asked by Leask at what point he would decide on a caesarian section as opposed to a vaginal birth if he were supervising a diagnosed breech birth, Borsman said that would depend on a number of factors.

He said he would first order an X-ray and ultrasound scan of the fetus and pelvic region to obtain the most accurate measurements of the baby and bone structure.

This, he said, would indicate whether a caesarian was reasonable.

But the position of the baby or how it was presented, and the force of labor contractions would also be taken into consideration.

In any case, he said, he would probably not perform a caesarian if the baby was delivered to waist level.

Borsman said in his 6,000 deliveries as an obstetrical specialist, he had done that only once as a heroic, last-resort instance.

Borsman told the court he has taken an active part in discouraging home births, which he said at this time and place are dangerous.

He testified he would feel irresponsible if he did not oppose them, noting the law forbids an unlicensed person to deliver a baby at home or anywhere else.

Many persons, through literature on the subject of home birthing, have the daylights frightened out of them about hospital procedures, while home births are glorified, he said.

Borsman said he does not dispute the right of people to want to have babies in a home setting and said in recent years, hospitals have tried to allow for as many home aspects as possible in childbirth.

With a patient who insisted on home delivery, he would try to see that complete prenatal care is given and to encourage a hospital delivery.

Under cross-examination by Crown counsel Nicholas Lang, Borsman said in a breech emergency where a hospital is notified the patient was en route, there could be an obstetrician and anaesthetist available in as little as 15 minutes, perhaps 30 minutes.

If he were called to a home and found a birth had started with a foot emerging, he would call for an ambulance, he said.

Dr. William H. Dyson, a general practitioner, said Elizabeth Ambery went to him Feb. 23, 1978 asking for prenatal care, which he was reluctant to give because he would be absent from the city when her baby was due.

He said this did not bother the expectant mother because she was planning to have the baby at home, and he agreed to give care even though he was opposed to home deliveries.

She made six visits, the last of which was June 25, when he told her he was arranging for another doctor to attend her if the need arose during his absence, but only in hospital — not at home.

Ambery was to see this doctor before Dyson left town to ensure that they would be compatible.

He said he was angry when he learned on the eve of departure that she had not seen the other doctor and he made new arrangements for an appointment.

Dyson said when he last saw Ambery, her baby was in head-down presentation but not yet engaged.

It was still possible for the fetus to turn around before birth.

"We both knew what that meant but also that it was darned unlikely that anything would happen," Dyson said.

The baby was in good condition at that point, he said.

He testified he was not more persuasive toward Ambery to have her baby in hospital because he did not want to disturb her — rather he wanted to give her confidence.

"She had great faith this was the only way to have a baby — at home," the doctor said.

Leask said he wanted to show the court there is a genuine difference of opinion in Victoria and B.C. on the subject of births at home.

"That it is not so simple as doctors versus women or obstetricians versus mothers.

"Home births aren't just hospital births that take place at home," he said.

There are some risks, but they are risks some mothers are ready to take.

Carol Kautz, 29, of Sacremento, Calif., said she stayed for three months with the accused at her Sooke home prior to July 12, 1978.

Marsh had not acted as a midwife during that time, she said.

She said she met the Ambery couple when they visited Marsh's home.

On the morning of July 12, she testified, she went with Marsh to Ambery's home and remained until after the ambulance left in the evening.

There was talk at first of home births, and she said Betty (Ambery) was excited at the prospect when Kautz told her about her own three home deliveries.

She said the Amberys had a strong preference for home birth and had made preparations by setting up a double bed in the livingroom.

Other members of the Ambery family, including children, were there aas well as someone who was supposed to take pictures of the birth, Kautz said.

As it turned out, the birth took place in the bedroom.

Kautz said she helped Marsh and she and the photographer brought hot towels during the delivery.

She said she knelt on the bed and held the baby and Marsh gave it mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

She said Betty's husband asked if he could call an ambulance and Marsh said it was all right to get one.

Marsh attempted to clear the baby's lungs and put a couple of drops of liquid into its mouth, which the witness called "Bachflower rescue remedy".

Questioned by Lang, Kautz said she did not think anything was wrong when she saw one foot, then the other emerge.

She was aware that breech births occur. But when the baby had fully emerged there was no sign of life.

Lang referred to a transcript of preliminary evidence in which it was said Betty asked to be taken to hospital but Kautz said she did not recall this.

She agreed Marsh's preoccupation during the birth had been as much with the spiritual as the medical.

Under re-examination, she said Marsh displayed a spiritual preoccupation for the three months she stayed at her home and this emerged during the discussion with the Amberys before the birth.

In their cross-examination, both Dr. Borsman and Dyson said they had never heard of Bachflower rescue remedy and agreed putting liquid into a newborn child's mouth could be dangerous.

Poll shows 38% favor new site for Games

TORONTO (CP) — Thirty-eight per cent of Canadians feel the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow should be moved to another location, a Gallup poll shows.

Results based on 1,038 personal, in-home interviews with adults 18 years and over showed that 30 per cent felt the games should be held in Moscow, 13 per cent thought they should be boycotted by Western nations, 10 per cent said they should be cancelled and nine per cent of those polled said they didn't know.

A sample of this size is accurate within a four percentage point margin 19 times in 20.

The question asked was: "The Olympics are scheduled to be held in Moscow this summer. In view of the troubled situation in the Middle East, do you think the Olympics should be held as planned in Moscow or do you think some other arrangement should be made?"

The suggested alternatives were presented on a printed card.

No ferry fare-hike furore

By NORMAN GIDNEY

A firestorm of opposition greeted the B.C. Ferry Corporation's last fare hike in 1975 but its recent proposal for a 25-to-33 per cent increase in car fares has come in like the proverbial March lamb.

In fact, representatives of organizations who screamed the loudest last time generally favor the plan.

Some even want fare increases imposed more often, in little doses.

Ferry corporation general manager Charles Gallagher has suggested an increase of $2 to $3 in the basic $9 rate for transporting cars one-way between Vancouver Island and the Lower Mainland.

Passenger fares would not change.

Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Cedric Steele doesn't think the increase will adversely affect the tourist trade on Vancouver Island, as long as it is restricted to cars.

He said there are usually two or three people in each car and as long as passenger fares are left the same, the traffic would remain the same.

The extra cost might even encourage people to stay on the Island two or three days longer than they might otherwise have, he said.

He thought the move will conserve energy if it encourages British Columbians coming to Vancouver Island to use the bus.

Realtor Ed Higgin, president of the Visitors Information Centre, is also receptive to Gallagher's arguments for a fare raise.

"I don't think we would have a critical comment on the increase," said the representative of Victoria tourist operators.

Higgin said fares should be adjusted upwards annually to keep up with the cost of living so ferry users don't get hit with a crippling blow like the 100 per cent increase in 1975.

Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber said his party is not opposed to modest, regular increases that reflect increases in real costs.

In this particular case, Barber said, "I would expect the government to release the economic impact study that surely they must have conducted."

He said that when the transport ministry's spending estimates come before the legislature, the NDP will again grill Transport Minister Alex Fraser about the impact of large ferry fare increases on the Island tourist industry.

If the cabinet approves such a large increase as Gallagher has proposed, Barber said it will be another example of shoddy planning by the government.

Hydrofoiled again!

Two cabinet ministers from the Victoria area are pushing publicly for a jet-hydrofoil service between Victoria and Seattle this summer.

However, time and the tide of cabinet thinking are against them.

Education Minister Brian Smith says he would like to see a jetfoil service operated on an experimental basis by the Crown-owned B.C. Steamship Coompany, which has operated the Princess Marguerite service.

Finance Minister Hugh Curtis also favors a jetfoil service but would like to see it run by private enterprise.

Former Socred cabinet minister Sam Bawlf is urging the government to move this week to lease or lease-to-purchase at least one jetfoil from Boeing in Seattle.

He warns that if the government does not move by Friday it is unlikely Boeing will have any hydrofoil craft available for this summer.

Transportation Minister Alex Fraser, with whom the final decision rests, isn't saying anything.

However, in the past, he has indicated there will be no public money available for jetfoils.

Fraser is sticking with his basic plan: To replace the Marguerite, which he says is obsolete and unsafe, with the smaller and slower Queen of Prince Rupert, at least for this summer.

Fraser meets next Tuesday with the B.C. Steamship board of directors.

Topping the agenda will be general manager Arthur Elworthy's sudden, public switch to supporting a return of the Princess Marguerite, contrary to stated government policy.

Teachers query poll

A questionnaire sent to Victoria teachers asking them among other things what they think of their principals will be done again if the Greater Victoria Teachers Association (GVTA) has its way.

Association members, while not opposed to the nature of the questions, are unhappy with the manner in which the poll was conducted.

Trevor Calkins, association president, says some of the schools were improperly instructed on how the questionaire was to be completed.

The poll, one of eight surveys being carried out by the Greater Victoria School Board's commission on education, was prepared by education consultant Dr. Stan Knight of Vancouver and sent to all 1,300 teachers in the district about two weeks ago.

The form included 50 questions asking teachers what they think of the calibre of administration and personnel policies and practices.

Calkins said that when the forms were first sent out they identified each school where they were completed by number.

The GVTA objected and the commission agreed to delete the number but not all schools were advised.

Calkins said he had also received some complaints principals stood by and watched the teachers fill out the forms.

He felt some teachers may have felt intimated by the principal's presence.

If the questionnaire is done again, the GVTA wants the senior delegate to the association from each school to hand out the forms.

Commission chairman Bernard Gillie said fears of teachers are unfounded.

The forms are impossible to read without a question guide, he said.

The information will be fed into a computer to get a district-wide impression of the level of competency of administrative staff.

Gillie said the association's request will be discussed at a meeting of the commission this week.

Former chief dies at 79

Stancombe who headed the force from 1945 to 1962, died on Saturday at the age of 79.

A native of Cornwall, England, Stancombe came to Victoria as a boy and joined the police force in 1933.

65% of MDs back policy on abortion

About 65 per cent of the doctors replying to a poll at Victoria General Hospital on abortion policy favor the approach taken by its therapeutic abortion committee.

The VGH committee recently has been turning down virtually all abortion applications and almost all area abortions have been performed by Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Dr. Don Shorting, chief of the medical staff, said about two-thirds or aproximately 100 of the 155 doctors on active staff at the hospital replied to the questionnaire.

Replies will be accepted until the next meeting of the medical executive commmittee on Tuesday, he said.

Shorting said comments on the questionnaire seem to suggest that doctors would like to see the abortion committee made up of lay people, not doctors.

The doctors also indicate they would like abortions done at special abortion clinics, not hospitals.

Federal legislation that governs abortions requires that for abortions to be legal, they must be sanctioned by the majority of a committee made up of at least three doctors on staff at the hospital performing the operations.

No provision is made for lay members on the abortion committee.

Alan Patterson, chairman of the hospital board which appoints the abortion committee, said earlier that while the board will not be bound by the outcome of the poll, it might generate bad will if a concensus of the medical staff is overturned.

Roomie boom: sharing, saving, hoping for best

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Once upon a time it was common practice for college students or young career girls leaving home for the first time to share accommodation.

Today it seems just about everybody's doing it — stockbrokers and single parents, divorcees and senior citizens.

One reason the shared listings in the newspaper is getting longer as more and more people look for roomates, is the high cost of renting.

Last summer Fraser created Roommate Registrar, a Victoria referral service for people who want to find roomies.

The service offers a money-back guarantee and has successfully placed about 50 people so far.

"It's a growing trend, particularly with rising rents," says Fraser.

"It's more economical and in most cases much better than living on your own."

Fraser estimates he's lived with 10 or 15 people over the years.

He now shares his house with a single mother and her two children and likes the family atmosphere so much he's looking for another single mother to move in.

His clients come in all ages and from every economic level.

Fraser found a roommate for a man with a $10,000 Afghan dog and a luxury condominium and recently had a client who was over the age of 70.

However, about 30 per cent of the inquiries about the service come from single mothers, who have great difficultly renting because of discrimination against children and a shortage of two and three-bedroom units.

Most people want roommates simply because it's cheaper, but Fraser says older clients are also concerned with companionship.

"We try to find out their lifestyles — if they like Mozart or Jefferson Airplane."

Fraser tries to match people of the same age group and sex — unless they state otherwise — and there have been some pretty interesting combinations.

Some roommates prefer to run a co-operative household limiting personal involvement with the other person.

Fraser, however, prefers communal living where chores are shared and everybody gathers around the dinner table for an evening meal.

"We cook together, eat together, do everything but sleep together," he said.

Lack of privacy is no problem for Fraser, who says he loves kids and noise.

And when problems arise they are discussed before they create friction.

Inviting a stranger into your home can be a risk, but Fraser says he is a good judge of character and so far hasn't made any disastrous matches.

"You take a gamble when you get into your car," he shrugs.

Fraser says for a $10 registration fee people can save themselves the hassle of dozens of interviews and — for women in particular — the problem of fending off weirdos.

His service charges a person seeking a place to live an additional $10 placement charge after registration.

Janice Winfield, a 24-year-old government employee, advertised on her own and remembers a few unpleasant experiences.

Of six previous roommates one was extremely untidy, another started a fist-fight over a boyfriend and a third — well, she'd rather just not talk about.

But Winfield says the hassle is worth it because she has fond memories of other friends who shared her large, two-bedroom apartment.

The $250-a-month suite is one of four apartments in an older home on Simcoe near Beacon Hill Park.

During her four years as a tenant she has always shared because it's cheaper.

Winfield found her latest roommate, a 20-year-old sales clerk, in one day.

"I must have received 125 calls. I finally had to take the phone off the hook.

"Some people were pretty unhappy I had already found a roommate after only one day."

Money saved on rent is used travelling, says Winfield, who went to Barbados last year and recently returned from a trip to California.

Rochele and Monica Weber rent a four-bedroom house near Gorge Road Hospital and recently interviewed 25 or 30 people who answered their advertisement for two men to share it.

The two girls, originally from Saskatchewan, prefer living with men because the're easier to get along with.

"I lived with girlfriends before and usually you don't end up friends," says Rochele, 22, who works on call for B.C. Tel.

The pair had some trouble with their last male roommates, who skipped town without paying the rent, so they did some careful screening before selecting their new tenants.

The landlord, a family friend, doesn't mind them renting out their spare rooms, says Rochele.

She describes their lifestyle as casual. Since two people are seldom at home at the same time, meals are often eaten alone and everyone is expected to do their share of the cleaning.

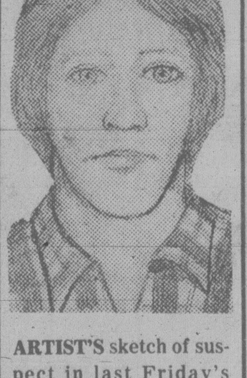
"Basically, it's everyone for themselves."

Bridge pier going

Tenders wil be opened by the highways ministry March 13 on a contract to demolish the concrete bridge pier and a 15-metre steel plate girder span of the disused railway bridge over Interurban Road at Interurban and Burnside.

All work to be done, including removal of the materials, must be completed within a month afrer the contract is awarded.

The removal of the large concrete pier adjacent to the Trans-Canada Highway will increase visibility at the corner.



ARTIST'S sketch of suspect in last Friday's armed robbery of the T&W Market, 1165 Newport, was released today by Oak Bay police. Suspect was one of two youths who held up storeowner at knifepoint and escaped with $265, making their get-away on 10-speed bikes. Four women in a car chased them a short distance and provided police with a description which resulted in sketch drawn by Sgt. Bob Blair of Victoria RCMP.

Bennett prodded to fight cable sale

Capital Cable Co-operative has asked Premier Bill Bennett for a meeting to discuss the proposed takeover of Premier Cablevision by Canadian Cablesystems of Toronto.

Premier Cablevision is the parent company of Victoria Cablevision.

Capital Cable, sponsored by a number of Victoria residents, has tried unsuccessfully in the past to bid for the Victoria cable licence.

In a letter to the premier, co-op general manager Herschel Hardin refers to Bennett's public statement in regard to a proposed takeover of MacMillan Bloedel by Canadian Pacific that B.C. is not for sale.

"British Columbian ownership and control of its own cable licences — a cultural and communications sector — is even more essential to our self expression as a region," Hardin says.

Aside from its Victoria licence, Premier holds a licence in Vancouver and Coquitlam and has 340,000 subscribers.

HARDIN
. . . "crucial"

Hardin says this represents virtually half of all cable subscribers in B.C.

He says the company also has a 45-per-cent interest in Western Cablevision in Surrey and Abbotsford with another 67,000 subscribers.

"Control of the technical and financial capacity of the province's cable industry, for future developments, is a crucial consideration," he says.

"It is inconceivable that British Columbians will willingly let such a valuable and growing resource, and a monopoly public utility as well, be taken out of their hands by a Toronto company.

"It is no less disturbing, in fact quite shocking, that this outside takeover would happen through the exclusion of competing British Columbian applications for the same public licences."

Hardin says the procedure whereby a Toronto conglomerate can apply for a public licence for Victoria and a community organization like Capital Cable cannot, is unconscionable.

Overweight and out-of-shape students are no surprise to Greater Victoria School District chairman Carol Pickup.

Pickup said today she is not shocked by an education ministry report rating physical fitness of students as weak and revealing a large number of them are obese.

"There's no doubt there are a number of children and adults in our society who are overweight," she said.

But she said Education Minister Brian Smith is "totally out of whack" when he blames schools for selling junk food to students.

Chocolate bars and chips were cleaned out of school vending machines several years ago.

Smith said Tuesday vending machines that sell junk food should be removed from the schools.

He said vending machines are a common sight in schools and universities and as sources of quick nourishment.

Pickup said the problem is one of educating society, not just children in B.C. schools.

"The issue of obesity is much wider than the schools," she said.

Television commercials for junk foods have a lot of influence and people tend to watch television too much instead of going outdoors and exercising, she said.

PICKUP
. . . what about adults?

Students eat breakfast cereals that are 90 per cent sugar and then bring pop and chocolate bars to school or go out and buy junk food at lunchtime.

However, she admitted the school system could do more to educate students.

"We certainly could make an extra effort and should make an extra effort to improve programs," she said.

Pickup said she agrees with a remark by Smith that more emphasis should be placed on individual conditioning instead of highly competitive team sports.

Students should be taught that fitness is a lifetime pursuit, she said.

The report also notes a disturbingly high incidence of overweight students, both male and female, at the Grade 3, 7 and 11 levels.

Smith said he intends to take action to improve the situation.

Minister doesn't want vendetta with doctor

Health Minister Rafe Mair says he doesn't want to get into a vendetta with Victoria eye specialist Dr. Don North over who is to blame for an elderly patient going blind.

North charged last week his patient, suffering from cataracts, went blind while waiting six months to be admitted to Royal Jubilee Hospital for elective surgery.

Mair replied that the fault lies with North because he could have changed the surgery booking from elective to urgent and had his patient admitted months earlier.

North, in turn, accused the minister of taking the easy way out.

He said Mair had a choice between attacking the doctor or attacking the problem and he chose to attack the doctor.

"The last thing that will help the situation is for Dr. North and myself to get into some kind of vendetta. I don't want to get into that game," Mair said today.

He said the government is working to correct the problem of acute-care hospital beds being occupied by long-term-care patients and in the meantime, he is looking to hospitals and doctors for cooperation in an awkward situation.

In response to reports of other eye patients waiting months for cataract surgery, Mair admitted it is possible "to make out some sort of inflammatory case," that will get lots of attention.

"My point is, let's get back to addressing the problem — that we haven't got enough beds to do all the jobs that are necessary unless we cooperate while new beds are being brought on stream," he said.

The minister's comments came as a spokesman for the United Church issued a call for the provincial government to build more extended care facilities for the elderly, releasing beds for surgery.

Some of the $300 million surplus reported by the government last year could be used to create more beds, Diane Kendall, secretary of the Victoria Presbytery, suggests in a letter to Mair.

Kendall said the church realizes the government is under pressure to spend millions on sports complexes and convention centres, but it believes extended health care should be given top priority.

Seriously ill people now have to wait three to five months for surgery at Royal Jubilee and Victoria General hospitals because beds are occupied by extended care patients who have nowhere else to go, the letter points out.

"We are making big strides in the new hospital for Victoria, in the 50 beds made available for extended care in the Eric Martin Institute and in the proposed James Bay Extended Care Project.

"But as concerned people, particularly families young and old, we know of the dire shortage of beds for extended care. In Victoria we probably have more people over 65 than in any other city in Canada for its size."

Long range planning is necesary to meet the needs of senior citizens, the letter says.

"We urgently submit that this proposal for such desperately needed facilities could and should be given a very high priority," Kendall says.

No room for error in Cup ski races

LAKE LOUISE, Alta. (CP) — Tuesday was to have been Ken Read's day of glory but the final downhill ski race of the season proved once again there's no room for error in World Cup competition.

Read, skiing in fourth position, had a "reasonably good run" down the 3,150-metre Lake Louise course but it was only good enough for eighth place and ended his hope of becoming the first Canadian male to win a World Cup over-all downhill championship.

That title went, for the second straight year, to Peter Mueller of Switzerland who, despite his 14th place finish, completed the season with 96 points.

Herbert Plank of Italy won Tuesday's race in one minute, 50.47 seconds. In second place was Harti Weirather of Austria in 1:51.24 followed by another Austrian, Werner Grissman in 1:51.47. The top Canadian was Steve Podborski of Toronto, who finished fourth in 1:51.76.

"I'm very disappointed because I know now that I'm not unbeatable on this course," said Read after he finished in 1:52.39. "I'm not disappointed in my run, I think it was a reasonably good run."

Read, 24, who finished the season in second place in the downhill standings with 87 points, said the course was in excellent shape.

"Unfortunately there was a little snow overnight and with the snow from the previous few days, the course was slow for the first few skiers. It got faster as it was skied . . . you can see that in the results."

Many of the racers, including Read and Mueller, had some problems in the upper sections of the course and were unable to make up the lost time in the lower part.

"I had some trouble at the top where I made some little mistakes," said Mueller. "But it was a little better in the lower part. Still I'm happy to win the World Cup."

Read and the Canadians studied videotapes of other skiers Monday night, especially on the upper part of the course.

"We were losing a lot of time on the top . . . we seem to do that a lot," laughed Read. "We analysed the line others were taking and I think it made some difference today. Still, I think I could have been better up there."

"I didn't really make any errors . . . my result could be credited mostly to snow conditions."

Podborski, who also had problems near the top but regained enough time in the technical part of the course to finish fourth, said the course was "a little rough, the way it should be."

"The light snow created problems for the early runners and I know that Dave (Murray) and Ken would have a difficult time."

Murray, who drew the No. 2 starting position, finished in 21st place in 1:54.10. Dave Irwin of Thunder Bay, Ont., finished 12th in 1:52.89.

Murray was particularly disappointed in his performance, although he blamed much of it on his starting second. "But, the draw is a major part of ski racing."

"I'll have to think about my future and decide if I really can improve and get back to where I was last year."

Plank's victory didn't come as a great surprise. He had been skiing well all week and finished first in the final training run Monday. Canadian downhill coach Heinz Kappeler named Plank as one of the favorites for the race.

Plank, who had finished second behind Mueller twice this year and third another time, finally got his victory and it moved him into third place with 81 points.

"Sure it's disappointing not to win," Read said later. "But there can be only one winner and Peter deserved to be that winner this year. But I feel good to have skied so well all year and then to have this race go so well here.

"I think that'll be very helpful for the future and I think we'll see the World Cup back here again next year."

The champs and the young on title trail

By BILL WALKER

Victoria will be represented at each end of the spectrum, so to speak, in national ladies' curling playdowns later this month. And hopefully well.

The Flora Martin rink from Victoria Curling Club gets the elder statesperson (if that's the word?) role as it heads for Fredericton, N.B., next week for the senior women's national championship; while the Lana Lacheur foursome from Oak Bay takes off for Charlottetown, P.E.I., on Thursday for the girls' final, which opens Saturday.

And Flora and her rink of third Elsie Humphrey, second Verle McKeown and lead Edna Messum probably deserve that venerable type of recognition more than most.

After all, they are No. 1, the defending champions, won 10 straight games in last year's national at Vernon and in zone and provincial playoff competition this year have an unblemished record.

The Martin story goes back even further. This is her fourth national and already she has won three and earned a place in the Canadian Curling Hall of Fame doing it.

She took her first senior championship at Halifax in 1974 with Messum playing third, Doreen Baker at second and Betty Stubbs at lead. And that group repeated in 1975 at Swift Current.

Age is something women don't generally mention in passing, so why not pass? But it should be explained the qualifying age for seniors is 50 years; and, as Edna has been with Flora for seven years — when the title-winning first started — that tells all. Or enough.

Elsie has also curled with Flora for several years — 11 to be exact — but not always in the senior category, while Verle is in her third year as a senior. The rink's experience (and age) can be judged accordingly.

The championship runs March 15-20 with Friday, March 21, set aside for possible tie-breakers.

Meanwhile, on the other end of the scale, the Lacheur rink that will represent the province in the girls' competition, with one exception didn't know one another eight months ago, and is so young that a recent reception in its honor couldn't be held in the main lounge at Oak Bay. Ridiculous B.C. liquor laws forbade it and the presentation ceremony was forced into a small foyer adjoining the lounge.

Three of the rink members — Lacheur, third Colleen World and second Janice Wilson are just 18. Lead Maureen Okell is 19 (the only one allowed in the lounge) and the only member of the rink to have played with Lacheur before.

Lacheur and Okell were high school students together and were members of the Sheri Bath rink of Oak Bay which finished runner-up in the provincial championship last year. Finding themselves needing help and two players at the beginning of this season, they went shopping for the other half of their rink.

They found it. A friend of Lana's said she knew someone who wanted to curl. Colleen World was mentioned, contacted and that's how she became the third. As for Wilson, Lacheur just up and asked her if she wanted to curl. Presto! The rink was formed.

Lacheur, who started her curling career in Nipawin, Sask., 10 years ago, is a legal secretary. World is originally from Esquimalt. Her family lives in Qualicum and she attends UVic. Wilson is a student at Mount Doug while Okell is presently between positions.

The Lacheur rink is coached by Tony Pisto. Rose Evans coached the Oak Bay girls last year.

The Lacheur rink did not compete in a regular league. Rather, the season was confined to practicing, practice games and bonspiels before entering and winning the South Island and the provincial title at Tsawwassen.

Lacheur says the type of competition the rink has received in practice games with senior rinks such as women's zone winner, Ruby Niemeyer, whom she played Monday night, has been a great help to her and the rink, as has the coaching of Pisto.

Lacheur also expressed her own and her rink's appreciation of the donations received at the recent reception at Oak Bay. "We can never thank them enough," she said.

All of which is why Victoria ladies' curling appears in good hands — at both ends of the rainbow.

FRIENDLY ADVICE was the name of the game at Victoria Curling Club this week as two Victoria quartets prepared for national championships later this month in eastern Canada. Above, defending Canadian ladies' senior champion Flora Martin explains strategy to Maureen Okell, Colleen World and Janice Wilson of the Lana Lacheur junior rink. Below, Lacheur benefits from the experience of other members of Flora's rink, Verle McKeown, Edna Messum and Elsie Humphrey. The Lacheur rink of Oak Bay leaves Thursday for the ladies' junior nationals at Charlottetown, P.E.I., beginning Saturday, and the Martin rink from Victoria Club departs next week for the seniors' championship at Fredericton, N.B. starting March 15. Rick celebrates, but not our Tim

Times News Services

CALGARY — Rick Folk celebrated his 30th birthday a day early Tuesday and spoiled Northern Ontario's perfect record in the Canadian men's curling championship.

But for B.C.'s Tim Horrigan of Victoria, it was no time to party.

Folk, the Saskatchewan skip, a runner-up in the national tournament the last two years, handed Al Hackner of Thunder Bay a 6-5 setback in the seventh draw, then came back in the evening to beat Manitoba's Earle Morris of Winnipeg 7-5 to move into a share of first place with Northern Ontario after eight draws of the Labatt Brier at the Stampede Corral, both with 5-1 records.

The Horrigan rink lost two games, 6-4 to the Territories and 7-4 to Ontario.

Skip Al Delmage of the Territories made a hit and stick for two in the 10th for his win while Ontario counted a three-pointer in the fourth, then stole singles in each of the fifth and sixth ends en route to their triumph.

Folk's Saskatoon foursome, including third Ron Mills and brothers Tom and Jim Wilson at second and lead, respectively, had two important games today — against Montreal's Jim Ursel of Quebec and Alberta skip Paul Gowsell of Calgary.

Folk, who lost 8-5 to New Brunswick in the third draw Monday, felt his rink was a little fortunate to beat Northern Ontario.

"We would have been in a very tough spot (for first place) if we had lost that one. But we're curling good as a team. We're not giving away many points."

Six rinks remained in the running for the playoffs.

Alberta, Quebec and Ontario's Russ Howard of Penetanguishene all had 4-1 records. The Territories was 4-2 with Horrigan 2-3 still with a chance, however slim.

In other eighth-round results, Nova Scotia stole two in the 10th end to shade Newfoundland 7-6, Alberta scored three in the eighth to beat P.E.I. 7-4, Quebec got one in the 10th to nip New Brunswick 5-4.

Alberta beat New Brunswick 6-3 in the seventh draw, while Quebec defeated Newfoundland 6-3 and Ontario downed P.E.I. 6-3.

In the morning draw, Northern Ontario whipped Manitoba 11-3 and the Territories bounced Nova Scotia 11-5.

The 15-draw, round-robin portion of the 12-rink championship concludes Friday unless tie-breakers are necessary to decide the top three positions.

The second- and third-place teams meet in a semi-final game Saturday at 11:30 a.m. PST, with the survivor going against the first-place rink the following day at 11 a.m. Both games will be televised on the CBC national network.

After eight draws, the attendance was 25,926.

In the Northern Ontario-Saskatchewan game, Hackner was leading 5-3 after seven ends but ran into trouble when Folk got hot and the Thunder Bay rink couldn't come through with key shots.

Cats edge Blades despite the agents

By ERNIE FEDORUK

At high noon Tuesday, Jack Shupe was not happy.

Eleven hours later, or about 50 minutes after his Western Hockey League team had beaten Saskatoon Blades 4-3 at Memorial Arena, the normally-placid Victoria Cougar coach still was not happy. As a matter of fact, he was in a mood to risk charges of assault.

Hockey's player agents are getting under Shupe's skin.

It mattered not that Victoria's defence corps struggled and stumbled, or that only two of four lines displayed any offensive zip. Over-all, definitely not the kind of performance from a team that is heading into the final weeks of the season and battling for first place in the Western Division.

Shupe acknowledged his team's shortcomings Tuesday but directed much of the blame at hockey agents, the "guys who don't care if we win or lose. They're only interested in bamboozling the players."

"On the day of a game," he continued hotly, "an agent has to take one of my players out to lunch. My guy turns in his worst peformance of the year.

"On another occasion, earlier this year, I think it was the same agent, also on the day of a game, who wanted to take Brad Palmer out to lunch. Fortunately, Palme[illegible] think the timing was too good and didn't go.

"I'm not going to stop my players from talking to agents. One would think, however, that the agents would show enough courtesy to wait until the day after a game."

Tuesday's luncheon date, it was learned, was between 17-year-old Len Dawes and Bud Quinn, a representative of the Alan Eagleson-Bill Watters agency.

"The players' minds are obviously not on the game," continued Shupe. "It (the parade of agents) cost us a Memorial Cup in 1973 (when Shupe coached Medicine Hat Tigers to the national finals) and its not going to happen here.

"I must have 19 guys ready to go. Not just half of them," added Shupe. "Tonight they just weren't concentrating on the game. You could see it every time they went chasing for a puck in our end. If they came up with it, it was fine. If they didn't, that, too, seemed to be fine."

For the sake of future concentration, Shupe has scheduled a team conference before today's regular practice. Presumably, the matter of luncheon dates will be discussed.

But for goaltender Kevin Eastman, generally solid, and two lines, the Cougars were fortunate to claim the points that brought them to within five points of first-place Portland Winter Hawks.

The line of Grant Rezansoff, Palmer and Bob Jansch was clearly Victoria's best. Palmer scored two goals and helped set up Barry Pederson for another. The Pederson-Greg Adams-Bud McCarthy line, while not at their winging best, also was effective.

The Rezansoff-centered line got away nine shots but Victoria's remaining two lines managed only seven.

The Mark Morrison-Torrie Robertson-Bob Smith line has been without a goal for four games. In one of those, as a unit, they managed only one shot. Tuesday, their total was four.

Equally distressing to Shupe was the effort of his five defencemen. On another night, against another team, it would have been disastrous.

In other games Tuesday, Regina Pats counted a pair of power-play goals to shade the Wheat Kings 3-2 in Brandon while Billings Bighorns pulled into a tie for third place with Medicine Hat by defeating the Tigers, 6-3.

Baseball players set for strike

Times News Services

The executive board of baseball's Major League Players' Association on Tuesday authorized striking the opening of the 1980 season if a new labor contract is not reached with baseball-club owners.

The action was disclosed after a five-hour meeting at Tampa, Fla., between the executive board and its director, Marvin Miller.

Miller said that a resolution was adopted directing him to seek ratification of the strike action by major league players.

Miller said the board would meet again on April 1 in Dallas to consider the status of the 16-week old negotiations and take whatever action is warranted.

The season is scheduled to open on April 9.

Also in baseball, Johnny Bench says this may be his last year as Cincinnati Reds' regular catcher. Bench once said he might curtail his catching this season and try to extend his career behind the plate. But it appears more likely now that Bench will catch as much as possible this season and move to first base next year, the last year of his current contract with the Reds . . . Dave McKay, a Vancouver native who formerly played infield for Toronto Blue Jays and is now a free agent, has been invited to try out with Oakland A's.

While Oakland Raiders were starting to set up shop in Los Angeles Coliseum Tuesday, the National Football League went to court, trying to establish another legal barrier to the team's proposed move to Los Angeles. But the Los Angeles Coliseum was quick with a counterattack. Before a scheduled late-afternoon hearing could be held in Alameda County superior court, the coliseum went to federal court Judge Harry Pregerson in Los Angeles and sought to enjoin the NFL from bringing the action in Oakland. Pregerson issued an order temporarily restraining the NFL, which filed suit to stop the Raiders from moving without league permission as spelled out in NFL bylaws. The league and 27 teams — all except the Raiders — filed the suit . . . In Rome, a state attorney has formally notified 27 soccer players, including two members of the Italian national squad, that they were being investigated on allegations that they have accepted bribes to influence the outcome of league games . . . In Baltimore, a federal mediator has called the union representing 700 striking parimutuel technicians and their employer, American Totalisator Co., together for talks.

Alcan's Kemano project a threat to B.C. fisheries

by stewart lang

Looking at the situation from a long-term point of view, Alcan's proposed Kemano II project would cost the people of British Columbia far too much and deserves to die on the drawing board.

The potential disaster is so monumental that it has removed the polarity which normally exists between commercial and sports fishermen.

Most of B.C.'s commercial and native fishing organizations have joined forces with the B.C. Wildlife Federation under The Fishing Industry Committee on the Environment.

The new organization outlined its objections to Kemano II in a recent statement which explained the Alcan project would "jeopardize about 20 per cent of the Fraser River's valuable sockeye salmon stocks as well as about 40 per cent of the annual sockeye harvest from Skeena-Bulkley, Dean and Kemano river systems."

Based on studies already undertaken by various government agencies, the committee "estimates the proposed hydroelectric project would create a drastic, 90 per cent reduction of water flow to the Nechako River system, west of Prince George."

Stocks originating in the Nechako tributaries yield an average commercial catch of 798,000 sockeye. This figure represents 20 per cent of the average catch produced by all the Fraser River sockeye stocks in the same 20-year period.

In addition, the average annual Indian subsistance food fishery catch from Nechako sockeye stocks is 36,000 fish — 31 per cent of the total native food fishery from all Fraser runs.

Another point to consider is the fisheries potential of the area.

The lakes in the Stuart and Nautly river systems, which would be affected by any change in the Nechako, have the potential of rearing enough sockeye to produce an annual catch of 5.2 million fish.

"These unutilized lake rearing capacities represent two-thirds of that (potential catch) for the total Fraser River system."

Right at a time the provincial and federal governments are co-operating (spending taxpayers' money) on boosting the sea-run cutthroat, steelhead and salmon stocks on the Pacific coast through the Salmonid Enhancement Program, it seems rather ludicrous to construct some project which would eliminate a good percentage of this effort.

Alcan's claim of 2,000 new jobs created by the project isn't an acceptable tradeoff for the loss to the fishing industry which would occur if it goes ahead.

A conservative estimate of 25,000 people directly involved in the commercial fishing industry as well as thousands more involved in the sports fishing industry, native food fisheries and the support and service industries would face a significant loss in income because of Kemano II.

"The combined effects of the flow reduction due to Kemano I and II would reduce the commercial fishery catch by 9.6 per cent . . . ," states the Fishing Industry Committee.

And that's only the immediate impact.

Provincial energy minister Bob McClelland has promised public hearings into the environmental impacts before a decision is made on Kemano II but there are existing statutes at both the provincial and federal levels to block or severely limit the development.

First of all, the B.C. government has the unilateral power to cancel or change its 1950 agreement with Alcan in whatever manner it chooses to protect the interests of the people of this province.

The federal government can step in by invoking portions of the Fisheries Act, Navigable Waters Protection Act or the Canada Waters Act. They could also press the issue of Indian land claims or, through the National Energy Board, prevent B.C. Hydro from exporting surplus power generated by the facility.

James McGrath, the former federal fisheries minister, went on record as being opposed to the project.

So we're left wondering how Romeo LeBlanc, the man who spearheaded the tough new sections of the Fisheries Act, stands on the issue now that he's back in power?

Canada Cup tournament on again

TORONTO (CP) — The six-country Canada Cup hockey tournament is back on schedule, Alan Eagleson, chief international negotiator for Hockey Canada, said Tuesday.

Eagleson said he will meet with federal sports minister Gerald Regan to recommend that the federal government give its backing to the tournament, scheduled for this fall and most likely to be held in Montreal and Vancouver.

Eagleson had said during the Winter Olympic Games last month that if Canada and the United States boycotted the 1980 Summer Olympics to protest the Soviet Union's occupation of Afghanistan, then Hockey Canada should cancel the tournament.

However, he said Hockey Canada has rethought its position and decided to proceed.

Canucks top Jets, boost playoff bid

Times News Services

For two periods Tuesday night it appeared Vancouver Canucks would prefer being on the road rather than in the unfriendly confines of the Pacific Coliseum.

The Canucks, sporting one of the worst home records in the league, were in danger of losing yet another home game as they fell behind the punchless Winnipeg Jets 1-0 early in the third period on a goal by Willy Lindstrom.

Vancouver then got a break when Curt Fraser got a lucky goal off his skate and later defenceman Kevin McCarthy fired the winner while falling to the ice as the Canucks won 2-1 to strengthen their bid for a Stanley Cup playoff berth.

"We sure appear to be paranoid about playing here at home," said coach Harry Neale of the Canucks. "Everyone gets upset with us and we even seem to get upset with ourselves.

"We don't seem to be able to relax at home and it's a fact that lately we've had some of our best games on the road. I guess we haven't played a good game at home for at least two months.

The win moved the Canucks into third place in the Smythe Division, a point ahead of Edmonton Oilers who lost 6-4 to New York Islanders, and more important moved them into 16th place in the over-all standings. The top 16 teams at the end of the regular-season schedule advance to the Stanley Cup playoffs.

Vancouver now has 53 points, one more than Edmonton and Quebec.

Mike Bossy scored three goals to lead the Islanders to their win and run his goal production to 45 for the season. Philadelphia Flyers beat Colorado Rockies 4-1 in the other game.

Denis Potvin, who returned to the New York lineup on Saturday after missing 43 games with a thumb injury, scored his first goal since Nov. 28.

Wayne Gretzky and Don Ashby each scored twice for the Oilers. Ashby has replaced injured Brett Callighen on Edmonton's top line.

"Playing with someone like Wayne is a real advantage and I'm sure I'll get more goals as I get familiar with him," said Ashby, who tallied his first two goals of the season.

Bob Kelly and Bill Barber started the Flyers off right, each scoring in the first minute. Dave Gardner, who joined the Flyers earlier in the day from Maine of the American Hockey League, had a goal and an assist.

"It's very disconcerting to look at the scoreboard and see two shots and two goals," said Colorado coach Don Cherry. "That's not the first time it happened to us this year, either."

Top Canadians set for Elk Lake meet

Involvement by athletes from all across the country who are attending the Olympic training camp here will turn the Victoria City Rowing Club's annual spring regatta Sunday on Elk Lake into a mini Canadian championship.

Rowers from Quebec, Ontario and the Maritime provinces will compete against crews from British Columbia and Washington State in both sweep oar and sculling events in the one-day meet that starts at 10 a.m.

As well as the national training camp members and the host Victoria City Rowing Club, crews competing will come from the University of Victoria Rowing Club, the University of British Columbia, Vancouver Rowing Club, Burnaby Lake Aquatic Club, Shawnigan Lake and Brentwood Schools, Seattle Pacific University and Lake Washington Rowing Club in Seattle.

Launching area for the races will be in front of Victoria City's clubhouse around the back of Elk Lake with the course running down the west side of the lake. All men's races for singles, doubles, fours and eights will be of 2,000 metres, which is the full length of the lake at that part and the women will race over 1,000 metres.

Bruce Ford, who with Pat Walter hit the headlines last year by winning the gold medal in the double sculls at the Pan-American Games in Peurto Rico, is the regatta chairman.

Fans wishing to watch some of the finest rowers in Canada in action should follow rowing regatta signs along Brookleigh Road from where it leaves the Pat Bay Highway.

New golf tour stop at Glen Meadows

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian Professional Golfers' Association announced Tuesday the rebirth of a Canadian tour for the 1980 golf season.

The tour, consisting of 20 tournaments and a driving championship, will have a total purse value of $281,000.

The last official Canadian tour died in 1977 after withdrawal of the sponsor.

The top money event in 1980 will be the $100,000 International CPGA Championship, Aug. 10-17 in Edmonton. Other important stops include the $20,000 Quebec Open, $15,000 Saskatchewan and Manitoba Opens and the $35,000 British Columbia Open, which is scheduled for Glen Meadows Golf and Country Club in Sidney.

The CPGA believes this new tour is just the start of a an international tour which will include Canada as its stops.

"Right now we're working on having two $150,000 international tournaments held in Canada in 1981 besides the CPGA championship which will attract the top players from around the world," Janes said. "Other countries are working in the same direction and next year we plan to be part of an international tour that includes Australia, New Zealand, Asia, South Africa and Europe."

The bidding:

Opening lead — five of hearts.

Defense is generally passive or active. In some hands, the best plan is to simply stand pat and do nothing at all that might give declarer a trick he is not entitled to. This is called passive defense.

In other hands, you can't afford to sit still. You must adopt an active form of defense. Sometimes your activity will offer very little promise, but you must attack anyhow, because you see that playing possum will hand declarer the contract.

Let's say you're West, defending against three notrump. You lead a heart to East's jack, which declarer ducks, and East then plays the queen, which South ducks again.

At this point you should take the queen with the king, not simply because you have the K-10-9 and can afford to, but because it would be futile to allow partner to win and play still another heart. You know you have no entry card for the hearts and that it can't help your side to play a third round of hearts to force out the ace. You would be beating a dead horse in that case.

Instead, you lead the jack of spades at trick three. This play can't do any harm and might do some good. True, your partner is unlikely to have the queen, considering South's notrump bid, but it is possible. At any rate, a spade shift offers more promise than a heart continuation.

As it happens, you hit pay dirt. Declarer wins and plays the A-K of clubs, hoping the queen will fall. When it doesn't, he leads another club. East wins with the queen and returns a low spade to eventually put the contract down two.

But with a thoughtless heart continuation by West at trick three, South would make three notrump.

"You say you heard the explosion some time between three and four o'clock yesterday afternoon," said Sandy. "Can't you give the exact time?"

Hank shook his head. "Maybe you could figure it out," he replied. "I happened to be looking at the clock at that moment, but I only remember noticing the [illegible] was just seven minute marks ahead of the hour hand."

No peeking at your watch, now! What was that time?

Braves reach final

Saanich Braves left little to chance Tuesday, romping to a 12-1 decision over Juan de Fuca Gulls at Pearkes Arena for a three-game sweep of the best-of-three South Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League playoff semi-final series.

The league champions now tackle Oak Bay Trios in a best-of-five final starting at 8 p.m. Thursday at Oak Bay Recreation Centre. The second game is scheduled for 6 p.m. Sunday at Pearkes.

Ian McLean hammered in three goals to spark the Saanich club, Marty Irvine added two and singles were contributed by Tracy Patterson, Shawn Connors, Don McKay, Dave Robbins, Brian Goodwin, Greg Bertrand and Ron Brooks.

Wakelyn finished up with 34 saves. At the other end of the ice, Scott Bumphrey and Mike Spiteri combined to block 51 shots.

New appeal in tuna fishing case

Written appeal against a judgment handed down last Friday by a B.C. Supreme Court justice in Vancouver was filed Tuesday afternoon in Victoria.

Robert Higinbotham, lawyer for 18 U.S. tuna fisherman charged last summer with fishing within Canada's self-proclaimed 320-kilometre (200-mile) limit, filed notice of appeal of Mr. Justice Kenneth Meredith's decision which dismissed Higinbotham's original appeal of a Vancouver provincial court ruling.

The notice was filed on behalf of Wallace Edward Gordon, one of 11 Americans facing trial in Vancouver on charges of illegally entering Canadian fisheries waters and fishing in Canadian waters. Eight other Americans face similar charges in Victoria provincial court.

Higinbotham appeared before Judge Kerry Smith in Vancouver provincial court Nov. 20 and challenged the court's jurisdiction. However, his objection was overruled.

Meredith rejected Higinbotham's appeal on grounds that the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, which sets out the territorial limit, was beyond the power or capacity of the government because the legislation infringed on international law. Higinbotham also argued that if the legislation applies, the courts have no jurisdiction to act because the act was not clear enough in its terms.

Mr. Justice Meredith ruled that domestic courts must apply domestic laws over international laws, and, on the second premise, the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act incorporated Section 681 of the Canada Shipping Act, which gave the courts jurisdiction.

In his appeal of Mr. Justice Meredith's ruling, Higinbotham stated four reasons:

— That the judge erred in finding that the courts of Canada are bound to apply the domestic law, even when domestic law violates entrenched international law;

— That the judge erred in finding that international conventions regarding freedom of the high seas had not been made part of the law of Canada;

— That the judge erred in finding that the provincial court had jurisdiction as a result of the combined effect of section 9 of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act and section 681 of the Canada Shipping Act;

— That the appellant was denied natural justice in the Supreme Court by reason of the judge having considered further written argument by counsel for the respondent (Crown) and not permitting counsel for the appellant sufficient time to respond before handing down reasons for judgment.

In the meantime, the trials of the 11 to be heard in Vancouver have been postponed until March 28 when a new trial date may be fixed, and of the eight trials to be heard in Victoria have been postponed until March 31 for possible fixture of new a date.

30-day term for $800 welfare fraud

David Brian Pettifor was sentenced in Victoria county court Tuesday to 30 days in jail after being found guilty of welfare fraud.

Judge Peter Millward also placed Pettifor on 12 months probation during which he must pay back the ministry of human resources which he defrauded of $800 between Feb. 1 and July 31, 1975.

There is a Persian rug on the floor, what does that tell you about the owner? Probably that he is well off. Also, he'll be a secure person because a Persian rug is a good saleable item in these inflation-ridden times. It is easier to sell expensive Oriental carpets today in a sluggish economy than it was in the 1950s and 60s, although the average price of an authentic Oriental carpet has greatly increased in recent years. An Oriental rug is an excellent hedge against inflation because its value increases constantly. The reason for this is the increased wealth and industrialization of Mid-East countries. Weavers and master artists are leaving their traditional work and are entering industrial employment, in addition the Government of Iran has introduced compulsory education thereby effectively eliminating the employment of children in rug weaving, says Ejaz Khan of Bokhara Carpet Palace. Mr. Khan will be displaying excellent selection of Persian carpets and rugs that will appeal to the discriminating and budget conscious home decorator and art lover offered to you at Bargain Prices. Mr. Khan invites you to come and investigate the opportunities provided by Oriental carpets, to make an investment that safeguards your money and provides you with luxury as it appreciates.

Before the judge

Judge Lorne Pearce denied bail Tuesday in provincial court to a 30-year-old man charged with aiding two escapers from the Jordan River forestry camp on Saturday.

Kirby Martin Hawkesworth, 1988 Kaltasin, was charged with two counts of assisting an escape.

Following a bail hearing in which he was represented by duty legal aid lawyer Brian MacKenzie, Hawkesworth was remanded until today for election of his trial method.

Adrian Andrew Dyrda, 2569 Asquith, was remanded until July 11 for a preliminary hearing.

"I don't think I've heard of more childish, immature behavior in my life," Pearce told a 23-year-old Port Renfrew logger.

Paul Eric Ropponen pleaded guilty to dangerous driving but pleaded not guilty to common assault in connection with a Feb. 15 incident.

Crown counsel Wayne Smith said Ropponen terrorized persons in the Evergreen Plaza shopping centre parking lot in Sooke about 8 p.m. by doing "doughnuts" in his Camaro Z-28 at speeds estimated at 50 km/h.

Ropponen had left the scene by the time RCMP arrived, Smith said, but found him at about 12:30 a.m. while investigating a noisy-party complaint.

Later that morning, Ropponen went to the RCMP office, became beligerent, and had to be placed in custody.

"You should be driving a kiddy car instead of a Camaro," Pearce told Ropponen. "Anyone who drives like that has no right on the highway."

The judge reminded Ropponen that the maximum sentence which could be imposed for dangerous driving is a $500 fine and six months imprisonment. Pearce said he would not levy the maximum sentence because Ropponen is working.

He fined him $500 and said he would recommend a one-year driving suspension.

The trial on the common assault charge was scheduled for July 21.

Fined $450 for drinking-driving were: Joseph Frank Parisien, 33, of 3925 Glanford; Robert Allan Bartko, 25, of 1293 Camrose Crescent; Gerke DeVries, 27, of 4041 Lakehill Place; and Donna Marie Rogers, 20, of 517 Ridgebank Crescent.

Diabetics look for run of luck

"We'll give you a run for your money."

That's the slogan chosen for this year's fund-raising drive by the Diabetic Association's Canadian branch.

And give you a run it will.

The drive will centre on Allan Metzler, a Winnipeg runner who's also a diabetic.

Metzler plans to enter the Boston Marathon and pledges will be taken on how many kilometers he runs.

John Law, president of the Greater Victoria branch of the association, says he doesn't know how far Metzler will go but he hopes it will be all the way.

Pledge cards will be distributed by local pharmacists and be available from the association's Victoria office.

Law said almost all of the funds used by the association go towards research.

For example, one major project is development of an artifical pancreas.

Diabetes is the third largest disease killer in the country, following heart disease and cancer.

It affects eight to nine per cent of the population and at least another five to six per cent has a tendency towards the disease which causes a blood sugar imbalance.

Chiefs rap health care

The Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs says the federal department responsible for the health care of native people gives "five cents on the dollar" service.

The union says in a brief to be presented at a federal inquiry into health care in Alert Bay on Thursday that federal agencies are unconcerned and ineffectual bureaucracies which are totally ineffectual in the area they are supposed to serve.

The brief states that Medical Services, the branch of Health and Welfare Canada responsible for Indian health care, has cancelled coverage of more than 100 Indians, many of them living far from postal services, "because these people have not replied to written correspondence requesting a permanent address to determine whether they are living on or off the reserve."

It calls for the removal of Dr. Mary E. Habgood, Medical Services director on Vancouver Island, charging she has an uncaring attitude towards the Indian people that are her responsibility.'

The union says the service wastes a large part of its budget on bureaucracy — "42.9 per cent of the total budgetary expenditure goes to salaries and staff travel accounts."

The inquiry at Alert Bay, a remote community of about 1,800 off northern Vancouver Island, was called by Ottawa following repeated demands by the Nimpkish Indian band.

Indians to get media push

Native Indian Randy Fred has developed the Quan-A-Tst Native Communications Society to encourage the advancement of the native Indian through the media.

Quan-A-Tst — a Coast Salish Indian word meaning handshake — intends to build a base from which native Indians can be hired in the media fields of newspaper, radio, television and publishing.

By generating a positive image of the native Indian, the society hopes to encourage more white employers to hire Indians.

With funding from the federal deparment of Indian affairs, the society and John Rostron, assistant dean of instruction, community services, at Malaspina College, organized a successful photography class in the winter of 1979.

The course was taught by Mark Kaaremaa, photographer for the Nanaimo Free Press.

A short course in newsletter production will be taught in April.

City blitz gets warm welcome

The Victoria Chamber of Commerce and Tourism British Columbia hit three Prairie cities in a promotion blitz this week and proponents are ecstatic at the welcome.

Led by Victoria Mayor Bill Tindall, the 26-member group formed part of the cheering section for Tim Horrigan's Victorian rink in Calgary at the Canadian men's curling championships on Sunday.

They distributed 500 dozen daffodils as well as 800 packets of flower seeds and Funfest '80 books from Tourism B.C.

Chamber manager Brian Small told the Times in a phone interview from Regina he was overwhelmed by the press, radio and television welcome.

Musical art showcase Sunday at McPherson

Each year at this time the Victoria Musical Art Society sponsors a talent showcase featuring a selected group of outstanding students in concert at the McPherson Playhouse.

The 1980 event will take place Sunday at the Mac at 2:30 p.m., the varied program including piano, string and vocal solos and ensemble performances. Mendelssohn, Chopin, Wienawski, Bach, Gounod, Ravel and Albeniz are among composers who will be represented.

Solo pianists are Eugenie Ngai, Monica Pfau and Miranda Wong. Violin solos will be played by Mark Neumann, David Lowe and Hilary Wallis and the sole cellist is Jennifer Wallis. The last two will also combine with their mother, pianist Rita Wallis, in a trio.

A group of selections from the opera, Faust, will include soprano Ingrid Attrot singing the Jewel Song, tenor Richard Margison in Salut! Demeure chaste et pure, and the two singers in the duet, Il se fair tard. They will be accompanied at the piano by Kevin Fitz-Gerald.

Completing the program will be a brass quintet from the University of Victoria consisting of Jeffrey Anderson and Peter Merry, trumpets; Karen Hough, horn; David Johnson, trombone, and Wayne Jones, tuba.

Ferry shift opposed

The district wants the ferry to run between Hatch Point, just south of Cowichan Bay, to Swartz Bay.

Central Saanich Ald. George MacFarlane said the Brentwood ferry run was put in years ago to provide a bypass for the Malahat and moving it would defeat that purpose.

Dear Abby:

I read in your column that a girl could become pregnant without going all the way. Thanks for printing it. That is what happened to me.

Before we were married, my fiance and I had gone together for 2½ years. We were very much in love, and just like the kids do today, we did a lot of hugging, kissing and cuddling, but I swear we did not go "all the way!" Nevertheless I found myself very much pregnant.

I couldn't believe it, but the doctor explained it to me exactly the way you explained it: "All that is necessary is for the sperm of the male to meet the ovum of the female, and this can be accomplished without actual penetration."

Even though we knew how it happened, it was hard to explain to others — and believe me, in our day you had to explain. We are now in our 60s, and we still kid about it, and call each other . . .

Dumbells

Dear Abby:

I am one of those "unusual cases" of a woman being a pregnant virgin. I conceived with my hymen intact.

When I went to the doctor, suspecting that I might be pregnant, he examined me and said I most certainly was. When it came time for me to have the baby, the doctor had to deflower me surgically. I never would have believed it, but I am living proof that a girl can become pregnant without going all the way.

Mrs. W.

Dear Abby:

I was very happy to see the item in your column about the girl who got pregnant and had a baby though she was still a virgin. The same thing happened to me when I was 17. He married me, and we have five children. The oldest is now 48.

People never believed me when I told them that that is what really happened. My doctor confirmed it.

B.P.

Dear Abby:

I am a 39-year-old mother of four, and I was just as innocent as that 55-year-old grandmother who asked you to explain how a girl could get pregnant and still be a virgin.

It's a shame how people can go through life half-ignorant because they're too embarrassed to ask questions.

There is so much constructive and worthwhile material written from the practical and professional viewpoint on this topic that everyone ought to do a little research at the local library to find out what they really do know — and a lot they don't, too.

Curtis curry a cost cutter

By PAT DUFOUR

Curried chicken is an exotic dish made hot, medium or mild for every taste

Finance Minister Hugh Curtis can help you cut cooking costs this week — with his favorite chicken curry.

Curtis' version of this classic is in Theatre in the Kitchen, a cookbook compiled by the actors' committee of Bastion Theatre in 1966. The cookbook is now out of print but I came across it while looking for different ways to serve chicken in the face of soaring beef prices.

Politicians are more often associated with rubber chicken than the real thing — hence the fascination with the curried Curtis version. He describes it as an authentic East Indian chicken curry.

"He loves it — it's standard Curtis," the minister's wife Sheila told the Times Tuesday. "He likes it so hot that the sweat just pours off.

"I don't like it quite as hot, but if anyone is fond of curry, they'll love this."

Sheila said she enjoys curried food but like many others "it doesn't like me."

When curry is served at the Curtis table there are two lots — one heavy and one mild.

It could be the answer to your search for something different, too. Here it is:

HUGH CURTIS' CHICKEN CURRY

2 ounces butter or margarine
2 large onions
2 large tomatoes
1 teaspoon curry powder
1 teaspoon allspice
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon ground red pepper
½ package frozen peas
3 pounds cut-up frying chicken
2 cups long grain rice

Simmer butter, chopped onions and tomatoes in heavy pot on medium heat for 15 minutes. Stir occasionally. Add curry, allspice, salt and pepper. Stir well and cook for 10 minutes. Make sure ingredients do not stick to bottom of pot.

Add chicken and bring to a boil over medium high heat. Then cover pot and cook on medium heat for 30 minutes.

Add two cups of water and boil for five minutes. Add peas and turn off heat. Serve after 10 minutes.

Rice: Boil four cups of cold water in a pot. Add two cups of rice, stir well. Cover pot with tight lid and cook on low heat for 20 minutes. Serves six.

This particular recipe book is prized in my kitchen because of its insight into the culinary choices of such notables as Curtis. Charles Morriss of Morriss Printing Company Ltd. covered the costs of producing the book. Only 1,000 copies were printed and I can't help wondering where the other 999 are today. Sheila Curtis says she has one — and with arts groups having to scramble for every penny nowadays, perhaps a revised edition could be produced by Bastion with additions and a bigger press run. Stephen Gentles? Where are you?

Still on the subject of chicken, I see that Jerry Gosley of the Smile Show contributed his own version of Coq Au Vin. This is the way he likes it:

JERRY GOSLEY'S COQ AU VIN

1 3-pound chicken, cut in sections
2 tablespoons olive oil
3 tablespoons butter
4 ounces lean raw ham or bacon
12 button mushrooms
12 button onions
1 clove of garlic
½ pint red wine
2 bay leaves
2 sprigs parsley
Pinch of thyme
Pinch of curry powder
Pinch of rosemary
Lump of sugar, to be added before thickening gravy.

Fry chicken in butter and oil after rubbing well with flour seasoned with pepper and brown on both sides. Simmer giblets and parts of chicken not used to make the stock.

After frying chicken, take pieces out, being careful not to break skin, and put into a casserole. Fry onions, mushrooms and ham together and add to the chicken with all the herbs. Add stock from giblets, sufficient to half cover the chicken, and cook very slowly in a 250 degree oven for one hour or more.

Remove from oven, thicken gravy with flour and add ½ pint of good red wine. Cook for a further 15 minutes. Just before serving pour on to the chicken four tablespoons of brandy and fire. Sprinkle with freshly chopped parsley.

Gosley noted his recipe is delicious "especially if you're not stingy with the wine!"

Mrs. Ian Ross of Butchart Gardens had her own way of serving chicken, handed down from her family. Here's how:

MRS. IAN ROSS' CHICKEN IN MILK

Take any amount of chicken desired — a fryer cut into serving portions or broilers cut into quarters. Wash and dry thoroughly, cutting off any excess skin. Place in roasting pan with lid. Dredge generously with flour, salt and Accent. Place heaping teaspoon of butter on each piece.

Pour milk over chicken until it is almost covered. Place lid on pan and put in preheated 375 degree oven and cook until chicken is tender when pierced with a fork. (This will depend on type of chicken used.) Watch that milk does not burn on sides of pan, lower oven temperature if this occurs.

When chicken is tender, remove from pan and place on oven-proof platter. Return to oven and brown gently as required.

Place pan, with juices in which chicken was cooked, on low heat on top of stove. Thicken with mixture of flour and water (again depends on amount of chicken cooked) and stir very gently. The gravy will have curds if you are not too vigorous but, in any case, is delicious if served over rice.

GISELE MacKENZIE'S CHICKEN CHAMPAGNE

Brown floured chicken pieces in butter for approximately 10 minutes until golden brown. Than add two heaping tablespoons of fresh chopped frozen or fresh cut-up chives and two heaping tablespoons of minced fresh parsley.

She continues, "Add three cups of chicken broth over the whole mess. Before you slap the lid on, add one small split of domestic champagne (about one cup) and bake covered in a 350 degree oven for 40 minutes. Gravy is wild!"

MIMI ROBERTSON'S CHICKEN IN SHERRY

Section two roasting chickens or broilers, wash and dry on paper towel. Dredge in flour seasoned with salt, pepper, rosemary and poultry dressing. Fry in butter until golden brown.

Place in large pot and pour on the following sauce:

1 can mushroom soup (I add a few more mushrooms to this)
1 cup of water
½ cup of sherry (a bit more, hic, if you like)
Few drops of Tabasco sauce.

Simmer in covered pan for 30 minutes or bake in a 350 degree oven for one hour.

Mimi says if she needs the time to prepare other dishes, she bakes the chicken in a 325 degree oven for two hours. This recipe serves six to eight people.

Singer Jock Dunbar had his own way of making the cooking dollar stretch. In character, he chose Scotch broth as the answer. Here is his version:

JOCK DUNBAR'S SCOTCH BROTH

1 pound neck of mutton
3 pints water
1 teacup barley
2 teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
Piece of cabbage
4 leeks (medium size)
1 parsnip
1 onion
1 carrot
1 small turnip
2 ounces beans
2 ounces peas
Parsley

Place meat and water in a large saucepan, bring to boil and add beans and peas previously soaked. Cook for 30 minutes.

Add barley, salt and pepper, parsnip, onion and part of carrot and turnip cut into small pieces, and the remainder of the carrot and turnip cut into large pieces. Simmer for three hours.

Half an hour before serving add the cabbage shredded, the leeks cut into halves and the parsley chopped.

Serve the mutton with the larger pieces of vegetable and some of the liquid and serve the remainder separately as broth.

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

There was a scientific furor that captured the imagination of the laity all over the world when the first test tube baby was born in England. At first there was extreme skepticism about its value to infertile women. Now, hospitals all over the world are trying to duplicate the exact technique that was first established in England by Dr. Patrick C. Steptoe an Dr. Robert G. Edwards.

A group of specialists at the Eastern Virginia Medical School have set up a program that will try this implantation technique in women who have not been able to conceive.

The procedure involves the fertilization of the female egg by the male sperm in a test tube. When kept in a special embryonic culture solution, the fertilized egg grows to viability. Then, it is implanted directly into the uterus, with the hope that it will "take" and that pregnancy will be established.

Under the supervision of Dr. Mason C. Andrews, it is expected that about 50 carefully selected infertile women will be treated during the first year, at the Eastern Virginia Medical School.

Very careful guidelines have been established in this well-controlled study. It is anticipated that many more such programs will be instituted all over North America if this initial program is successful.

Many thousands of women who have not been able to conceive normally may be the beneficiaries of this exciting and imaginative technique.

Patients who have been discharged from the hospital after having recovered from a heart attack can now be monitored for any recurrence.

Dr. Izzac Baldar, of Haifa, Israel, has created a device that can be worn by the recently discharged patient. Should the patient develop any unusual symptoms, the device quickly picks it up on its built-in electrocardiograph. This message is then immediately transmitted to a hospital computer that alerts doctors to the possibility of any impending new heart attack.

The electronic device is not yet available on the general market. It is expected that it will soon be completely refined, and ready for general use as an excellent safety measure.

Dr. Virginia L. Weimar, at the University of Oregon Eye Department, has discovered an important substance for the healing of eye wounds. The work in experimental animals will soon be translated to humans. The purified protein will be extremely helpful in the healing following cataract surgery, corneal transplants and eye injuries.

Frozen berries a treat

CLASSIC SHORTCAKE requires no previous experience to make when you unfreeze some of last year's juicy Saanich Peninsula stawberry crop tucked away to get you through the winter. Spring is almost here now — so open up that freezer chest and enjoy those cherished 'leftovers.'

By HILDA BEASTALL

Are there still a few packets of frozen berries in your freezer? If so, this is the ideal time to use them as delicious meal-lifting treats. At the end of winter we need the extra vitamins and minerals of sun-grown berries, picked when their values are at their highest level in summer, and quick-frozen to retain as many as possible.

After nine months of freezing at 0 deg.F, that is minus 18 deg. C, berries begin to deteriorate in quality though still safe to eat.

If a fair supply is available, these frozen strawberries, raspberries, logans and blacks can be used in a different way for desserts three times each week so that no one can say "What? Berries again!"

For breakfat, thawed in the refrigerator overnight, one packet of berries can be used over split buttered homemade muffins. The heated muffins will take the chill off the berries, or the berries can be mashed down quickly with a large fork, they will then lose their chill more quickly when in contact with the muffins.

As a really fine-looking delectable and satisfying dessert after a light supper dish, or for a weekend lunch, do make a Fruit Savarin.

This is a homemade fancy bread in a ring mould (sometimes called a tube pan), with whole berries in the "ring" space and mashed juicy berries thickly spread on top while the bread is still oven warm. The juices soak down a little into the bread. Homemade yogurt or cottage cheese adds to the flavors without swamping the berries; and has its own quotas of essential nutrients for a meal.

The whole thing is lovely for a family and visitors; the bread can be made a day or two before, and reheated through when wanted.

A smaller ring mould makes the same effect for one person, with two or three servings which can be used either cold or hot, according to taste on different days.

FROZEN BERRY SAVARIN

¼ cup warm water
1 tsp sugar
1 Tbsp dry yeast (1 pkg)
¼ cup hot water
3 Tbsp soft margarine
2 Tbsp sugar
¼ tsp salt
2 small eggs
1 cup unbleached flour
¾ cup wholewheat flour
¼ cup wheat germ
½ cup skim milk powder

Into large warm mixing bowl, measure warm water. Stir in 1 tsp sugar. Sprinkle yeast on surface. Leave 10 minutes to begin working.

In small bowl, measure hot water, margarine, 2 Tbsp sugar, and salt. Stir together to melt and dissolve.

Add eggs one at a time, beating with fork.

Now add egg mixutres to yeast mixture; beat to mix.

Measure the next 4 dry ingredients into a bowl and begin beating into the liquid ingredients a little at a time, using large wooden spoon.

Continue adding and beating until all is used, and a stiff batter forms.

Spoon into well greased and lightly floured 22 cm ring mould.

For quick rising method, put at once into cold oven; turn dial to about 35 deg.C (95 F) until savarin begins to rise (about 10 minutes). Turn heat off; leave savarin in oven to continue rising to double height, or to nearly the rim of the pan.

Then turn dial to 200 C for 10 minutes to stop rising and commence baking. After 10 minutes reduce heat to 175 C (350 F) for about 20 minutes longer to bake until lightly brown and done.

Remove from pan to wire rack to cool a little; then set on large fancy serving plate.

Crush more berries to make juice flow, and pile on top with 1 teaspoonful of sugar sprinkled over all. Let stand for half an hour.

Serve warm with homemade low-fat yogurt.

The same savarin recipe and method of rising and baking is used for other types of fillings. Just cut 2 Tbsp sugar to 1 Tbsp when using savarin for vegetable, meat or fish fillings. Also the milk powders could be left out when using meat or fish. It is used in the berry recipe primarily to add protein.

A sauce made from frozen berries at this season is useful for spreading the berry flavor over warm homemade muffins, as a Berry Dessert on its own or with homemade Granola or other cereal.

In this sauce, the seeds are sieved out, which is an advantage after a dry summer season has left berries with hard dry seeds. The absence of the seeds makes a sauce suitable for the very young and the very old.

Frozen Berry Sauce

500 mL frozen berries
125 mL water
50 mL sugar
25 mL cornstarch

Boil berries and water together gently for 5 minutes after boiling begins.

Strain over a bowl, pressing pulp through fine sieve with wood spoon to remove seeds. If seeds are no problem to any family member, omit this straining.

Put strained juice with the pulp (not seeds) back into saucepan; bring again to gently boiling point.

Meanwhile mix sugar and cornstarch in cup with 15 mL water. Add slowly to simmering juice. Stir constantly until thickened, about one minute.

Crisp Berry Dessert is a quickie when the berries are partially thawed in refrigerator before needing them.

Put the berries into a pie plate or a slightly deeper dish.

Sprinkle with fresh lemon juice and 5 mL sugar if none used in freezing.

Sprinke surface with enough homemade Granola to cover berries to depth of 1.5 cms; press down a little into contact with berries.

Bake at warm 165 C until berries are cooked and Granola is slightly browner than before. Test with fork into the berries — about 15 or 20 minutes should be long enough.

Serve warm with low-fat homemade yogurt.

Frozen summer berries when used in winter either still raw or cooked bring back the aroma of summer. Use them now while still having that freshness.

Meal for two is easiest

By KAY SPICER

When you're cooking for two everything is easier . . . shopping, preparation and clean-up. Nothing about it should be complicated or confusing. To simplify cooking for two buy as many foods as possible in individual size poritons . . . small steaks, chops and vegetables like potatoes, tomatoes, zucchini and artichokes.

Grate several cups of cheese at a time then place 1 cup portions in small plastic bags. Store in the refrigerator until you need them to scatter on a casserole or slip into a recipe. Preshape hamburgers, wrap and refrigerate or freeze. It's smart to have them ready and waiting. Plan your leftover dishes before you even cook the large roast you couldn't resist just because roast meat is always a treat.

Q. I have long wondered what the difference is between light brown and dark brown sugar. Can you tell me? And can you explain when you use one and when you use the other?

A. The production of various grades or types of sugar — granulated white, light brown and dark brown — is, to a nonprofessional, a very complicated procedure. Briefly, white sugar, light brown sugar and dark brown sugar can be produced from the same harvest of sugar cane. The color you find is derived from the sugar cane as it comes from the field. After the white sugar is made, the syrup used to make it is reboiled in a very high vacuum to produce a light brown or dark brown sugar.

The number of molasses constituents in the original sugar cane will determine the concentration of color in the light or dark brown sugars. To put it another way, natural plant pigments in the sugar cane account for the color.

Dark brown sugar has a stronger flavor. You would probably use it when a heavy flavor is desired such as in molasses cookies. Perhaps you would use a light brown sugar for, say, butterscotch cookies.

Q. A friend of mine may be a little confused. She read in one of your columns that you spin dry lettuce. She says that she does this, too. She rinses the lettuce, puts it in a pillow and adds this to a clothes dryer. She dries it on "low speed." Is she kidding?

A. I most certainly think so, but I most certainly do not intend to test her lettuce-drying technique. I use a commonly available plastic, Swiss import called a Rotor made by the Stockli Company.

There is also the Moulinex, a very good salad dryer imported from France. Basically, the gadget consists of an inner-basket into which rinsed lettuce leaves are put. The inner basket spins around and this extracts the excess moisture from the leaves. That is what I mean by "spin dry."

Q. You recently wrote an article about how to select fresh fruits and vegetables. You mentioned coconut, but failed to specify how to select a good one. How do you?

A. The two best indications of a good coconut are its weight and the amount of coconut milk inside. You can judge the weight by feel. You should also shake the coconut, to insure that there is a good supply of liquid in the center. Shaking first one coconut and then another will give you a comparative notion of how much liquid to expect.

I know that these are not the sole criteria for a first-rate coconut. No matter how much liquid is there, the meat of the coconut may be very old, in which case the liquid and flesh may take on a moldy taste.

The only recommendation I can offer is that you choose one with a very "vibrant" brown exterior, one in which there is a "brightness" about the "eyes," the three soft spots in the shell. As coconuts age they do take on a lighter, less intense look.

Readers are invited to send in questions about food and cooking techniques to the Food Editor, The New York Times 229 West 43d Street, New York, N.Y. 10036. Unfortunately, unpublished questions cannot be answered individually.

Fish poaching is fast

the 60-minute gourmet

One of the most widely used and admirable techniques employed in Chinese cookery is steaming — meats, fish, vegetables and so on. And one of the greatest steamed ingredients for hasty cookery or a meal in less than an hour is fish.

By far the best utensil for steaming fish is a fish cooker or a fish poacher. This is the oval implement with a cover. There is a rack with two vertical handles at either end to facilitate lifting the rack out of the cooker.

This utensil was primarily designed for cooking or poaching fish in a court-bouillon, that universal liquid made, generally, with water plus aromatics such as leeks, carrots, celery, onions and so on. This same utensil can be put to excellent use for steaming. In my own kitchen, I simply bend the rack handles forward slightly, just enough so that the lid can be clamped on. The reason for this is that to steam, you must elevate the racks slightly. For this, I use two small, after-dinner coffee cup saucers turned upside down. This elevates the rack and if the rack handles are not bent forward, the cover will not fit snugly on the cooker. Or if you choose not to bend the rack handles forward, simply cover the cooker with aluminum foil.

If you don't own or wish to buy a fish poacher, you can improvise by outfitting a wok or small roaster with a rack. The important thing is that the fish or whatever should not touch the water as it boils.

In the steamed fish recipe here, the cooking time for a two-and-one-half-pound striped bass is only 10 to 12 minutes. You can determine when the fish is done by tugging at the bones along the back. If they come out easily, the fish is cooked. An excellent sauce for steamed fish is a sauce Breval made with shallots, tomato and mushrooms.

STEAMED WHOLE FISH

1 whole fish such as striped bass, red snapper, sea bass, haddock and so on, 2½ pounds.

1 The best utensil for steaming a fish is a fish cooker. You can improvise, however, by using a Chinese steamer, a small roasting pan and so on. The important thing is to have a rack that can be slightly elevated above a basin of boiling water. As the fish cooks, the steaming utensil should be covered to allow as little steam to escape as possible.

2.If a fish cooker is to be used, place two small plates such as after-dinner coffee cup saucers upside down at each end of the cooker. Add the steaming rack and enough water to come up almost but not quite to the bottom of the rack.

3.Remove the rack and place the fish on it. If you bend the handles of the rack slightly toward the center, the lid of the steamer will fit snugly on top. If you do not bend the handles, you will have to cover the fish closely with heavy-duty aluminum foil.

4.Bring the water to the boil in the steamer. Add rack with the fish on it.

5.Cover closely. Let the fish steam until tender. A 2 12-pound fish will steam in from 10 to 12 minutes. Do not overcook. The fish is properly cooked when the bones along the backbone can be pulled out easily with the fingers.

Yield: 4 servings.

SAUCE BREVAL

3 tablespoons butter.
1 tablespoon finely chopped shallots.
2 cups thinly sliced mushrooms.
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
1 cup chopped, peeled, fresh or canned tomatoes.
½ cup dry white wine.
½ cup heavy cream.
2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley.

1. Heat two tablespoons of the butter in a small skillet and add the shallots. Cook until wilted.

2. Add the mushrooms and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Cook until they give up their liquid. Cook until the liquid evaporates.

3. Add the tomatoes and cook about one minute. Add the wine and cook about five minutes.

4. Add the cream, salt and pepper. Let boil about one minute. Turn off the heat. Swirl in the remaining tablespoon butter and stir in the parsley.

Yield: 4 servings.

Bumptious debate in name only

By JAKE BANKY

"If there were an election today you'd be wiped out," NDP MLA Graham Lea told the government Tuesday.

The challenge came during a noisy, bumptious throne speech debate that made virtually no mention of the throne speech.

The only reference to the speech came when NDP house leader Frank Howard moved the traditional motion of non-confidence.

After that the debate could well have been entitled "Dirty Tricks Revisited."

Opposition members, who have been comparatively restrained in their comments on Social Credit's recent problems, opened the floodgates.

"Lettergate, the dirty tricks, the bagman, the inquiries, the hundreds of manhours of policemen's work investigating, checking, double-checking . . .

"I don't know what it has cost us just in RCMP wages to check into the Social Credit party of this province," said Surrey NDP MLA Ernie Hall.

Another opposition member, Vancouver Centre's Gary Lauk, attempted to draw a direct link between Premier Bill Bennett and the Lettergate scandal.

Howard attacked Bennett for failing to vote in the last federal election.

He said the next time Bennett seeks any favors from Ottawa, Prime Minister Trudeau will tell him, "If you don't vote you've got no right to bitch."

Speaker Harvey Schroeder was kept busy maintaining order in the uproarious debate, coaxing members to withdraw their various unparliamentary remarks.

Industry Minister Don Phillips, in one of his famous, patented harangues, said he had never heard such "utter garbage" in the legislature.

He accused the NDP of digging up smut and making a personal, vicious attack on Premier Bennett.

Health Minister Rafe Mair launched an attack of his own — on Gordon Townsend, a prominent NDP supporter whose name was forged on several pro-Socred letters to the editor in the last election campaign.

Calling him the patron saint of the NDP, Mair launched into a sarcastic rhapsody, referring to Townsend as "a wronged man, a sufferer of democracy, a pillar of law and order and a bulwark of righteousness."

The minister then added: "I remember the day in March, 1975, when along with a band of 25 or 30 ruffians he (Townsend) broke into the cabinet room, hollering obscenitites, hollering the usual Marxian slogans and making a general pest of himself."

Victoria captain on training board

Capt. John Horne, 637 Beach Drive, a marine pilot with the B.C. Coast Pilots Ltd., has been appointed to the board of the Pacific Marine Training Institute.

Reappointed to the PMTI board were Edgar J. Jones of West Vancouver, vice-president of the Burrard dry dock division of Burrard-Yarrows Corporation; Dr. John D. Chapman of Richmond, acting head of the geography department of the University of British Columbia; Leo M. Gray of Vancouver, business agent for the Canadian Merchant Services' Guild, and John B. Ferguson of West Vancouver, an executive with the Gulf Group Canada Ltd.

Nielsen wrong to remain

Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen should have stepped down from office when it was revealed his office and home phones had been bugged by the RCMP, Bill King (NDP — Shuswap-Revelstoke said Tuesday.

King said outside the legislature it is customary under the British parliamentary system for a minister to stand aside when it apppears to the public he may be involved in inappropriate conduct regarding his office.

"In this case, it was revealed by the attorney-general that the RCMP had been bugging his office and under those circumstances I would have thought it would be appropriate for him to stand aside."

King said he was not suggesting any improper conduct on the part of Nielsen.

Nielsen was informed early last year that police had bugged his phones for 15 months in connection with an alleged conspiracy to bribe him with $100,000 for his help in getting land freed from the province's land reserve.

He was environment minister at the time but there was no suggestion in a recent court case that he had done anything illegal.

"I don't know what the basis was upon which the RCMP bugged his phone," said King. "But certainly it's not the customary thing one would expect to be going on in a minister of the Crown's office."

King said that if the same thing happened to him as a minister of the Crown "I would want to stand aside until I learned and the public learned upon what evidence a judge apparently authorized that invasion of my privacy."

Use This Home Recipe Plan to Lose Ugly Fat

It's simple how quickly one may lose pounds of bulky unsightly fat right in your own home. Use this recipe plan yourself. It's easy — no trouble at all and costs little. Just go to your drug store and ask for four ounces of Naran. Pour this into a pint bottle and add enough grapefruit juice to fill the bottle. Take two tablespoons full twice a day and follow the Naran plan.

If your first purchase does not show you the simple, easy way to lose bulky fat and help regain slender more graceful curves; if reducible pounds and inches of excess fat don't seem to disappear almost like magic from neck, chin, arms, bust, abdomen, hips, calves and ankles just return the empty bottle for your money back. Follow the easy way endorsed by many who have tried this plan and help bring back alluring curves and graceful slenderness. Note how quickly bloat disappears — how much better you feel. More alive, youthful appearing and active.

'Stupid blunder' charged

The government has backed itself into a corner in its proposed land swap with Marathon Realty for the B.C. Place site in downtown Vancouver, Vancouver Centre NDP MLA Gary Lauk charged Tuesday.

Environment Minister Stephen Rogers, responsible for B.C. Place, would give no details in the legislature on what land might be swapped for the CP Rail owned acreage on the north shore of False Creek.

He said only that an agreement in principle has been worked out.

"I think is was a stupid blunder on the part of the government to announce the project before completing the deal with CP Rail and Marathon Realty," Lauk told reporters.

"The people of B.C. want a stadium but they don't want to pay blood money for it."

Rogers, however, said the government will not be skinned in its dealings with Marathon. The government intends to pay only what is fair, he said.

Rogers said certain parcels of land have been set aside for the government negotiators to use as their playing cards when the time comes to deal, but he wouldn't say where these lands are or what their value might be.

Proportional answer soon

CALGARY (CP) — The Canada West Foundation expects to complete within a month a major study of proportional representation aimed at reform of Canada's federal electoral system, President Stanley Roberts said Tuesday.

The study was commissioned at a Feb. 23 meeting of the foundation's council after the Feb. 18 election left the Liberal party with no Commons represention west of Winnipeg and the Conservatives with only one seat in Quebec.

"Everyone has a different idea about what proportional representation is," Roberts said in a phone interview, noting that various versions have been espoused by NDP Leader Ed Broadbent, the Pepin-Robarts unity commission, Quebec Liberal Leader Claude Ryan and others.

"We want to come up with a simple version of it that will ensure all regions of Canada are properly represented in government and one that won't produce eternal minority government."

Subsidy to band 'shocking'

The use of a $7,500 government grant by a Vancouver teenage band for a trip to South Africa was termed shocking and insensitive by Burnaby-North NDP MLA Eileen Dailly.

The provincial secretary's office announced Friday that the 70-member B.C. Beefeater Band had been given the funds from lottery proceeds to help pay for a July trip to Durban.

"I know these kids are probably looking forward to this trip very much," said Mrs. Dailly. "But there is a principle here as far as I'm concerned.

"I'm sure there are many people who buy lottery tickets who do not support the racist policies of South Africa and will be incensed to know that their monies have gone to finance a trip to a country that espouses racial inequality."

Band spokesman Louisa Olson said the South African organizing body for the military tattoo at which the band will appear has indicated it will pay half the musicians' air fares and room and board in Durban.

Butterflies hover for Jimmy salute

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "I have stage fright, always have had it," confessed James Stewart as he steeled himself for a recent evening of tribute to James Stewart.

The tribute was the American Film Institute's (AFI) annual Lifetime Achievement Award. The dinner ceremony was being taped by CBS for showing March 16.

Stewart is the eighth person to be so honored, following John Ford, James Cagney, Orson Welles, William Wyler, Bette Davis, Henry Fonda and Alfred Hitchcock.

"I think it's very nice, because the AFI is a powerful outfit," Stewart said.

After 45 years in Hollywood — minus four years in the Air Force — Jimmy Stewart remains little changed. Perhaps the hair is thinner and his sentences take longer for completion. Some just drift off unended. Otherwise it's the same Stewart.

Jim and Gloria Stewart have lived in the same Beverly Hills house for most of their 30 years of marriage. Several years ago they bought the house next door, tore it down and turned the property into a spacious garden.

Players pick noted actor

By AUDREY JOHNSON

A replica of Shakespeare's Thames-side Globe Theatre on the Maltwood property is still not much more than a gleam in the eyes of its promoters.

However, at a a press conference staged by the Lord Chamberlain Players Society Tuesday, Barry Morse was introduced as its first artistic director.

The prominent Canadian actor, veteran of the long-running TV series, The Fugitive, and dozens of other stage and television shows, in a joke-punctuated but enthusiastic speech accepted the assignment.

He congratulated the "able desperadoes" who had conceived the scheme and brought it along so far.

Morse was in Edmonton attending the world premiere of the film, Klondyke Fever, in which he appears, when he received the invitation from project director Brian Lightburn, to come to Victoria.

Morse suggested that the opening date for the festival in the Globe would be sometime next year, hopefully in the summer of 1981.

The idea of building — as near as can be reasonably assessed — a replica of the Globe Theatre is thrilling, he said, adding his personal commitment that what is produced there will be "absolutely first-division.

"It will be no museum," he said. "The dominant idea will be to give the customers a bloody good time."

Lightburn said that the proposal had met with unqualified community support but declined to specify any source or sum committed to date.

He also said that only "ballpark estimates" of building costs were available at the present time.

World conservation strategy unveiled

WASHINGTON (AP) — A conservation group representing 100 countries warned today that unrestrained competition for the world's resources is "undermining the very means by which all people can survive and flourish,"

The International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources said its World Conservation Strategy was being announced simulatenously by leaders in at least 30 countries.

The program proposes adoption of dozens of specific policies by national governments and international institutions.

It says mankind's relationship with the environment "will continue to deteriorate until a new international economic order is achieved, a new environmental ethic adopted, human populations stabilize, and sustainable modes of development become the rule rather than the exception."

The report calls for removal of international trade barriers to goods from developing countries; greater financial aid by developed nations; more rapid progress on disarmament to reduce military spending; accelerated health, housing and education programs in the poorer countries; and "a code of conduct for transnational companies".

Its lengthy list of priority requirements for national and international action included:

— Setting aside prime croplands for agriculture.

— Protection of fisheries.

— Pollution control.

— Protection of endangered species.

— Governmental attention to conservation measurements that do not show up in monetary terms, the most common economic standard.

— Advance assessment of environmental impacts of major actions, a policy adopted by the United States 10 years ago, but not yet accepted internationally.

— Control of deep sea mining, a potential form of mineral production still in its earliest stages of development.

Bracelet said baby not hers

ALMELO, The Netherlands (UPI) — Two babies were mistakenly swapped at birth and the error was confirmed only three months later although one of the girls died earlier, it was disclosed Tuesday.

Both couples involved attended the cremation of the dead child, officials said, because they could not be sure whose baby had died. It was not until two weeks later that the mistake finally was proven.

A plastic identification bracelet worn by one infant and found months later in her mother's suitcase led to disclosure of the hospital mixup.

The surviving child was returned to her rightful parents Friday. She is their first child, while the other parents have one other child.

Wiesenthal medal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House of Representatives on Monday passed legislation to strike a congressional gold medal in honor of Simon Wiesenthal, the famed Nazi-hunter.

Second suspect in bizarre kidnap

MERCED, Calif. (AP) — A second suspect has been arrested on suspicion of kidnapping in the abduction of 14-year-old Steven Stayner, who for seven years lived with one of the men as his son.

Lieut. Bill Bailey of the Merced police department identified the new suspect in the 1972 abduction as Ervin Edward Murphy, 38, a night janitor at a lodge in Yosemite National Park.

Authorities said Murphy was taken into custody at the park and was then returned to jail in Merced, some 145 kilometres away, for booking.

Meanwhile, Kenneth Parnell, the quiet ex-convict once described by a psychiatrist as a "sexual psychopath," pleaded innocent Tuesday in Ukiah, about 32 kilometres miles from here, to kidnapping five-year-old Timmy White.

Pat Hallford, Merced County district attorney, said the statute of limitations on kidnappings is only three years and he was unsure if courts would permit a kidnapping trial in the Stayner case. As a precaution, Hallford said he would file additional charges of child stealing and concealment, which he believes is a continuing offence.

At least 671 weapons leaking nerve gas

TOOELE, Utah (UPI) — At least 671 of the weapons in the huge stockpile of chemical munitions at the Tooele Army Depot are leaking nerve agents and other potentially lethal substances, a spokeswoman for the base said Tuesday.

The spokeswoman, Kathy Moore, also said depot officials believe there are additional leakers in the depot's 45,000-acre South Storage Area which haven't yet been located by inspectors.

Most of the defective weapons are leaking the nerve agent GB, she said. Others are leaking VX, another nerve agent. Some are leaking a blister agent.

Ms. Moore said the leaking weapons — M-55 rockets, artillery shells, land mines and 750-pound bombs — present no hazard to either base workers or civilians living near the base. The deadly chemicals which leak from the weapons cannot escape from round storage bunkers known as igloos, she said.

When defective weapons are moved from the igloos to the detoxification plant, the munitions are place in sealed containers and transported in a sealed van. Workers are totally covered by protective clothing, she said.

"We've never had a lost-time injury due to chemicals."

The agents GB and VX are liquids when stored in the weapons. If the weapons are fired, the agents vaporize and produce a cloud of deadly nerve gas.

Ms. Moore said leaking munitions are destroyed at the depot's Chemical Agent Munitions Disposal System plant. But the facility has been in operation only since last September, and the base currently has 671 leakers in storage awaiting detoxification.

Leaking weapons were first discovered in the Tooele stockpile in 1967, she said. The corrosive chemicals apparently ate through weapon casings.

Second spy expelled

MARSEILLES(AP) — For the second time in three weeks, a Soviet diplomat assigned to this Mediterranean port city was been ordered out of France for spying, French officials reported Tuesday.

They said Viatcheslav Frolov, press attache at the Soviet consulate, left France on Feb. 28 as ordered. They did not disclose details of the case or say whether it was linked to a similar incident in February.

Hostage impasse continues

BOGOTA(UPI) — Negotiations between the government and leftist guerrillas resumed today for the ransom of 21 foreign diplomats held for a week in the Dominican embasssy but the Colombian armed forces warned against release of imprisoned guerrillas.

Foreign Ministry officials Ramiro Zambrano and Camilo Jimenez met with a hooded woman guerrilla and hostage Mexican Ambassador Ricardo Galan in a cream-colored van in front of the embassy.

While the talks proceeded after a two-day recess, the armed forces issued a stern statement in the form of an editorial in the military newspaper Armed Forces.

The phrasing of the editorial appeared to be an indirect warning that the armed forces would not tolerate the release of 311 jailed leftists who are facing court-martial for subversive acts or have been convicted.

U.S. flip-flop UN vote angers Israelis, Arabs

WASHINGTON (CP) — President Carter was in the midst of a political and diplomatic furore today following a White House about-face on a UN Security Council vote on the future of Jerusalem and Israeli settlements in occupied Arab lands.

Top U.S. officials concede the issue, which White House officials have blamed on a "foul-up" in communications between State Secretary Cyrus Vance and U.S. Ambassador Donald McHenry, has alienated both the Arabs and Israel.

American Jewish leaders sharply criticized the White House for its sudden shift from supporting to opposing a United Nations resolution condemning Israel's settlements in occupied Arab lands and calling for their dismantling.

Diplomatic sources said, meanwhile, that the turnabout came after the Israeli government made it known to Vice-President Walter Mondale and other U.S. officials that the resolution would alter the basis for Middle East peace talks, which Washington says are in a delicate and difficult stage.

While stopping short of a threat to scuttle the Palestinian autonomy talks with Egypt under U.S. sponsorship, the Israelis hinted strongly that they would reassess their participation in view of what they saw as American support for Arab positions.

"It was obvious that the autonomy talks could go forward only if all sides wholeheartedly participated," a U.S. official said Tuesday.

McHenry, the U.S. envoy to the UN, reacted angrily to the White House shift, saying it has left Washington with "the worst of both worlds — angering both Arabs and Israelis."

He told reporter he saw nothing objectionable in the resolution's references to Jerusalem, which the White House had cited as the reason for the reversal. He said all had been drawn from previous UN statements approved by the U.S.

The White House contends President Carter's objections to any criticism of Israel's control of East Jerusalem were not adequately transmitted to the U.S. state department before the Security Council vote.

Foreign aid, rice harvest avert massive starvation

By KEYES BEECH
Los Angeles Times

BANGKOK — Less than six months ago, Cambodia was teetering on the brink of massive starvation after a decade of war and revolution capped by the conquest of the brutal Khmer Rouge government by a Vietnamese invasion.

Thousands died and some may still be dying. But today it is clear that, contrary to some predictions, the Cambodians are not going to become extinct.

"We are around the bend but not over the hump," said an international relief official just back from Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital.

The December-January harvest, which appears to have made the difference, is expected to run out by April at the latest, and the Hanoi-backed government in Phnom Penh has admitted it will face "serious food difficulties" by May. Bangkok-based relief officials have expressed fear that Cambodia will face another famine over the next eight months but, if Hanoi and Phnom Penh can be believed, the situation may not be as bad as it seems.

Cambodian farmers have planted 1.5 million acres of rice during the current dry season which ends in May, according to a recent Radio Hanoi broadcast.

This is far less than the 3.5 million acres estimated to have been under cultivation in 1976 and that, according to the UN Food and Agriculture Organization, was less than the pre-Indochina War average of 5.7 million acres.

The months of chaos that followed Hanoi's invasion of Cambodia a little more than a year ago led to widespread starvation and sent hundreds of thousands of Cambodians fleeing to the Thai border in search of food.

The Vietnamese have sought to shift the blame to former Cambodian Premier Pol Pot and his Khmer Rouge supporters. Commenting on the current dry season planting, Hanoi said:

"It should be recalled that under the former Pol Pot regime rice cultivation in the dry season was abolished."

Hanoi claimed that the winter harvest, which was planted last autumn after the rains came, "brought in a bumper crop" of rice and subsidiary crops on 1.5 million acres of land. But Hanoi gave no figures on the amount of rice harvested.

Cambodia was saved from total disaster in the last months of 1979 when food began arriving from abroad. According to the Phnom Penh regime, the Soviet Union and Vietnam supplied 300,000 tons but some Western relief officials consider the figure to be greatly inflated.

Meanwhile, the UN Children's Fund and the International Commitee of the Red Cross funnelled 50,000 tons of food directly to the Phnom Penh government starting last September.

Just how much of this actually reached hungry Cambodians, nobody knows for sure, since it was impossible to monitor the distribution.

Relief officials are much more confident of what happened to food that crossed into Cambodia from Thailand.

About half a million refugees are being fed at a string of camps along the Thailand-Cambodia border, and relief officials estimate that enough food has been carried into northwestern Cambodia each week to feed an estimated 150,000 people.

U.S. officials have repeatedly accused the Vietnamese and their subordinates in Phnom Penh of deliberately withholding food from people opposed to the regime.

Refugee accounts support this accusation to the extent that government workers and others in favor in Phnom Penh get first call on what food is available. And a government directive has made it clear that "production solidarity teams" will be first among those to be fed.

hilda beastall

Not an easy question to answer is one asking which annual flower seeds can be sown outdoors in spring to give a mass of bloom this summer.

Here on the Pacific Coast, sowing outdoors of annual flower seeds in spring seldom results in a long color show. Better results are obtained with a fall sowing of the hardiest kinds. They make a small top growth and continue root growth in late winter mild spells.

At the present time, if cut flowers are wanted for August and September flower shows, or for garden display during that period, sowings can be made now in early March.

Our cool summers are not suitable to rapid germination of seed, nor of rapid new plant growth or early production of flowers as are the hot summers in other parts of Canada.

Locally, a patch of ground in full sun is essential, well cultivated and composted last fall so that the humus content holds moisture during summer without frequent watering. Water cools the soil and delays growth, but soil that has plenty of humus holds both warmth and moisture.

The annuals which will give good returns for the new gardener need these conditions. They are like those sown in fall, called the hardy types and will not be harmed nor delayed by normal cool spring weather.

Some of these suggested flowers are known to everyone for all have been grown in temperate climates throughout this century. Improvements have been made by seedsmen's selections, giving clearer colors, stronger stems, and longer flowering periods. Suggested for outdoor sowing during this current mild period are:

Cosmos, needs the longest growing season for it waits for shorter days of late August before setting buds; Cleome, common name Spiderflower, loves hot summer for attractive pink flower heads on 2 to 3-foot stems.

Clarkia an 18-inch annual with double flowers, clustered on upright stems; pink, carmine, red and white. Sow where to grow. Godetia usually a companion to clarkia, likes same conditions; 12-inch stems of single flowers in same color range.

Calendula is Scotch-marigold, or Pot-marigold, self-sows if allowed; new seeds today have much improved forms over the old types. Easy to transplant in the garden. Centaurea, the old Blue Cornflower, surprises you with pink, purple and white colors from a mixed packet. Nigella is a pretty oldtime blue flower with interesting flower formation and an equally oldtime name of Love-in-a-Mist.

Because calendula, nigella and centaurea are so easy to grow, they also will re-sow if allowed, an advantage in some gardens, but this can be controlled by cutting fading spikes promptly as with other plants, before seeds ripen and drop. This has the added advantage of prolonging the flower display through our usually pleasant fall months of September and October. The plants should then be pulled up for discarding to the compost heap, before even the late produced seeds drop. The plants will be useless the following year.

Nasturtiums are slow to start here in most years. They like hot sunshine, a moderately poor soil, though it should hold humus to prevent frequent watering which further delays growth by cooling the soil.

A still earlier start can be made with these annuals in a glass covered coldframe. Sow two or three seeds in each two-inch pot or small can, or in egg cartons. Thin each group to the one strongest seedling. Grow in frame, with ventilation on all suitable days, and often with glass removed entirely when temperatures are really mild. When seedlings have about two sets of true leaves, they may be transplanted, without root disturbance, to the flowering spots in the garden. Use groups of one kind together for good effect in summer and early fall.

These few annual flowers are ones not often found as bedding plants (except Calendulas) because of their special requirements.

Tin sale begins

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The U.S. government announced Monday it will begin bi-weekly sales of surplus tin from the national defence stockpile on July 1. Tin-producing countries, particularly Bolivia, have criticized the sales because they might depress market prices.

Kyprianou cheered

LONDON (AP) — Thousands of Greek-Cypriots cheered wildly when visiting Cyprus President Spyros Kyprianou stated he could never accept the present partition of the Mediterranean island into Greek and Turkish sectors.

Handicap group, McCarthy lock horns

Dr. George Stocker of the Capital Region Association for the Mentally Handicapped has denied his group is engaged in "confrontational tactics" over the impending closure of the Langwood Workshop.

The charge was made by Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy following a meeting last week.

Stocker said McCarthy's statement only diverts attention from the real issue.

"As we see it, the mentally handicapped in B.C. are being badly served when the funding policies of this government have the effect of denying them basic services."

He said a suggestion from McCarthy that last week's meeting was the first time the association tried to meet with her was incorrect.

"The fact is we have been attempting to meet the minister to discuss the problem of workshop funding since last October and it was only after the matter was brought to the public's attention that we received any kind of reply."

He said as of April 1 the association will be running up a deficit at Langwood of $3,000 a month.

"We have no alternative but to close it if this financial reality does not change," he said.

Referendum wrangle still a matter of words

QUEBEC (CP) — There was referendum action on at least three fronts Tuesday as debate began in the Quebec national assembly on the phrasing of the all-important question.

Premier Rene Levesque and Opposition Leader Claude Ryan both predicted victory for their respective sides in the referendum as they kicked off the 35-hour televised debate that will spread over three weeks of sittings.

Earlier, the government announced the appointment of Alan B. Gold, chief judge of the Quebec provincial court, as head of a three-judge referendum tribunal. Under Quebec's Referendum Act, the tribunal has exclusive jurisdiction to rule on "any judicial proceeding relating to a referendum."

And Eudore Allard, the colorful former Social Credit MP for Rimoluski-Riviere du Loup who lost his bid for re-election Feb. 18, became the latest in a string of Quebec personalities to announce that he will vote yes in the referendum.

Levesque opened the debate in the assembly with a low-key speech in which he denounced Confederation as an "obsolete regime." Its perpetuation through a no vote in the referendum would lead to a "reinforcement of inequality" between the two founding nations in Canada.

He called on all Quebecers to show their "solidarity" and give the government a mandate "to break the common front of the status quo."

Switching briefly to English, he acknowledged that English-speaking Quebecers, who "feel an unbreakable link to English Canada" aren't likely to heed his call but he assured them that he understands and will respect their position.

Ryan described the government's proposed referendum question as "tricky, dishonest and unacceptable in its current form" and said he can't accept being bound by such a "loaded question."

He proposed that instead of asking for a "mandate to negotiate" sovereignty-association with the rest of Canada, the government should ask Quebecers outright whether they approve of political sovereignty and if so, do they "think that a sovereign Quebec should seek an economic association with the rest of Canada."

Ryan scoffed at PQ arguments that even federalists should vote yes because that's the only way they'll get serious constitutional bargaining started.

Federalists have no choice but to say no in the referendum because the question disguises the PQ's real aim of breaking up Canada, he said.

Michel Le Moignan, who became interim leader of the five-member Union Nationale caucus Monday upon the resignation of Rodrigue Biron, generally echoed Ryan's sentiments.

Brawling boxer floors woman

TORONTO (CP) — Canadian lightweight boxing champion Nicky Furlano was convicted Tuesday in provincial court of assault causing bodily harm.

His manager, Pray-Travis Sugden, says Furlano plans to appeal the conviction and will go ahead with his Canadian title fight in Montreal on March 25 and the fight with James Watt for the World Boxing Council lightweight championship in Montreal in June.

Furlano was charged with assault after he hit Sharon Ferguson, 23, at a suburban nightclub in Toronto last November.

Mrs. Ferguson testified Tuesday she saw Furlano hitting her husband, Frank, at the club during a fight near the bar. She said she tried to grab the boxer's arm, but he punched her in the side of the face.

Mrs. Ferguson said she was bleeding from the mouth and moments later Furlano punched her again, knocking her to the floor.

Furlano is to appear in provincial court Thursday for sentencing.

Highway becomes runway

INDIAN HEAD, Sask. (CP) — Police Tuesday night cleared the Trans-Canada highway of traffic for a single-engine aircraft forced down with three men aboard near this community, about 70 kilometres east of Regina.

No one was hurt.

RCMP said the plane, on its way to Calgary from Thunder Bay, was running low on fuel and was told to land on the highway by officials at the Regina airport.

Dallas Kunkel of Esterhazy, Sask., who was driving on the highway at the time, said he at first took the plane to be a helicopter landing at Indian Head.

"We really didn't know what it was," he said later.

Nyets to neutrality

Times News Services

The Soviet Union has angrily denounced Western talk of establishing a neutral and non-aligned Afghanistan as a way of getting Soviet troops out and ending the current East-West confrontation.

The denunciation, broadcast by the official Moscow Radio, contained an implicit admission that the Afghan regime of President Babrak Karmal could not survive without a continuation of Soviet military support that put it in power Dec. 27.

The broadcast came four days after British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington gave to the Soviet ambassador in London an outline of a plan that has been discussed within the European Economic Community for making Afghanistan a neutral, non-aligned country. It followed President Carter's suggestion that Moslem troops in a UN peacekeeping force might be able to replace Soviet troops in a neutralized country.

The European plan was drawn up in hopes of finding a graceful way out that the Soviet Union could accept without having Afghanistan turned into a hostile country on its central Asian border. It was completed after Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev said Soviet troops would begin withdrawing once the United States and neighbors of Afghanistan had guaranteed non-interference there.

Talk of a neutralization plan was received coolly by Soviet media. But the broadcast Tuesday, a commentary by a Soviet television and radio "political observer" with the Central Asian name Farid Seyful Mulyukov, was more blunt.

Afghan neutrality is being discussed abroad "without the consent of the lawful government of Afghanistan and even without asking it how it feels about it," the observer said.

One diplomat quoted Afghan refugees in Pakistan, most of them primitive tribespeople, as having described "metal cannisters falling from planes and spewing out blue-green-gray smoke on hitting the ground.

"These backward people then describe how villagers acted like madmen, became paralyzed and died," he said. "These people may have been coached into what to say but there are so many allegations that something must be behind the claims."

The Pakistani government, meanwhile, rejected a $400 million arms and economic package offered to counter the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. President Mohammed Zia ul-Hag had previously termed the offer "peanuts."

And in Washington, U.S. Deputy Defense Secretary Graham Claytor disclosed today the White House plans to dispatch seven ships by June to the Indian Ocean region with equipment to support a Marine brigade of 10,000 men.

Nkomo joins Rhodesia coalition

SALISBURY (UPI) — Robert Mugabe, Rhodesia's new leader, today brought rival guerrilla chief Joshua Nkomo into a planned coalition government, which is expected to receive final independence from Britain in about three weeks.

But a spokesman for the prime minister-designate ruled out any similar offer to Bishop Abel Muzorewa, another black leader who headed the Salisbury regime near the end of the bitter seven-year civil war against the Mugabe and Nkomo guerrillas.

The country, which will be called Zimbabwe upon independence, was calm after a day of victory celebrations by the country's seven million blacks. Police in Salisbury said there were no unusual incidents.

Life in the capital was normal, and despite earlier fears about a victory by leftist Mugabe, there seemed to be no movement by Rhodesia's 220,000 whites to leave the country.

"We've decided to wait and see what happens," said one white businessman.

In London, British officials said they expected to turn power over the Mugabe's government in about three weeks. They said a senior member of the Royal Family — possibly Prince Charles — would fly to Salisbury for the independence ceremony.

Mugabe, the landslide winner of the independence elections, and Nkomo, the runner-up, met for 20 minutes Wednesday morning.

Mugabe, a 55-year-old Marxist intellectual, and Nkomo were co-leaders of the Patriotic Front guerrilla alliance that fought the bloody civil war that forced the white minority to agree to black majority rule.

The prime minister-designate decided to split with Nkomo when they returned from exile two months ago to campaign in the elections.

British officials said in London the date of actual independence, when the British flag will be hauled down at midnight and the flag of the new republic run up in its stead, was not yet definite.

Mugabe's Zimbabwe African National Union won 57 of the 80 black seats in the independence legislature, and Nkomo garnered 20 seats. Three other seats went to Muzorewa.

Bilk of human unkindness

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Roy Kidston has gone a bit sour on the milk of human kindness.

Kidston — a trusting soul — followed the Biblical adage about casting his bread upon the water.

So far all he's got back are crumbs.

Kidston, a 42-year-old jack-of-all-trades now living in Nanaimo, sent out a batch of letters to Chemainus, Duncan, Ladysmith, Tofino and Port Alberni residents selected at random from the phone book.

The letter appealed for funds in support of "The Children's Hospital."

Kidston enclosed a crisp new dollar bill in each letter and asked recpients to match or better it.

"I have done this because I believe that everyone is really kind, way down inside — that no one is really heartless — and that the only reason why folks do not help where help is needed is just because these needs are not impressed upon them hard enough," he said.

Kidston invited the people to keep the dollar if they wanted.

Unhappily, most people did.

Of the 195 letters which went out Feb. 19, only three resulted in contributuons being returned.

Two women sent $2 each and another woman matched the dollar.

Twenty-five people simply mailed back Kidston his original dollar.

He has barely recovered his postage cost.

Kidston, who has a reputation for collecting for charities — he once drove his taxi backwards from Tahsis to Gold River to raise money for the Tahsis Lions Club — said in an interview Tuesday he got the letter idea from a book.

"I know it was tried in the U.S. a few years ago and it worked well then," he said.

"But I get the feeling people's attitudes are changing now — people figure it's just another ripoff."

Kidston intended to send 1,000 $1 bills — his letter says that was the investment he was making — but decided to test the idea first.

He agreed his letter wasn't all it might have been.

He copied it verbatim and neglected to mention which children's hospital the funds would be going to — the new Children's Hospital in Vancouver.

And he forgot to offer donors receipts.

Because of those deficiences the Victoria Better Business Bureau contacted police.

Nanaimo RCMP checked it all out and found no wrong-doing.

Kidston, meanwhile, said he is abandoning the project.

"I still think it's a good thing. My expectations were I could get someone to hire me full time," said Kidston, who lost his taxi business last year.

"But how can I go to a company and get their support if I send out 195 letters and get less than 30 returned?"

Best laid drams gang agley

LONDON (AFP) — Scottish soccer supporters will no longer be able to quench their thirst with a drop of the hard stuff, the British government announced Tuesday from the House of Lords.

All sales of alcohol will be banned from soccer stadiums north of the border and Scottish supporters, whose turbulent invasion of London for the match with England at Wembley Stadium every two years strikes terror into the hearts of all Sassenachs, also will be barred from taking a bottle with them on bus journeys to and from matches.

How that part of the ban will be enforced was not explained.

The one Scottish club which will avoid the drink ban is Berwick Rangers, which plays its soccer in Scotland but sits just on the southern side of the English-Scottish border.

The ban will not be extended to rugby matches, a move which prompted a member of the opposition to claim the Conservative government was making a distinction of classes.

There is very rarely any trouble from over-excited rugby supporters.

Crash cause hidden?

TORONTO (CP) — A lawyer defending Transport Canada in a $15-million lawsuit arising from the crash of a Pacific Western Airlines 737 in 1978 said a Ministry of Transport employee told him the cause of the crash was intentionally hidden in the official report.

William Hobson, a federal government lawyer, also told a federal inquiry into aviation safety he still is not satisfied he has all the information.

Hobson had been called to testify about alleged shredding of documents by the crash investigators, three of whom have been suspended.

They are William Howes, co-ordinator of the report, Harold Fawcett, chief of the transport ministry's safety investigation branch, and Dr. Francois Dube, the medical expert on the team.

Hobson said Dube told him the cause of the crash was hidden in the accident investigation report.

"I said, 'Are you telling me that you buried the real cause of the accident?' I grabbed the accident report and said, 'Show me,' and he (Dube) turned to page 32 and said, 'That's what we buried in the report'."

The paragraph Dube pointed to, Hobson said, read: "The failure to report on the final approach and the unnecessary talk on company frequency represent an unacceptable standard of cockpit practice and discipline."

Diphtheria forces closing of school

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A diphtheria scare at a local elementary school led today to the closure of all classrooms for two weeks.

The Northern Interior Health Unit made the decision to close the school after it was suspected that the disease had spread from grade 1 children to others in grade 7.

School superindendent Alvin Myre said the school will be closed until March 17.

"This is a safety precaution while health officials are checking for further evidence that the disease is spreading," he said.

Special immunization clinics have been set up in the school, but parents are worried the highly contagious disease may spread. (See earlier story on page 3.)

Prices repel Japanese roe buyers

VANCOUVER (CP) — Japanese herring roe buyers said Tuesday they will not pay the high prices demanded this year by unionized B.C. fishermen because last year the market was artifically inflated by price-gouging.

"A ridiculously-high price scandal and a fake market demand" involving one firm which bought up 45 per cent of the catch in 1979 caused prices for the roe, a delicacy in Japan, to soar, they say.

The result last year was that buyers were paying up to $3,500 a ton for roe herring, far above the supportable price. But there was a successful boycott of the roe in Japan, forcing buyers to take a loss, spokesmen for the buyers said.

However, Jack Nichol, president of the fishermen's union, told the Vancouver and District Labor Council Tuesday that the fishermen are prepared to lose the entire season rather than accept an industry price offer which is little more than half of last year's minimum price.

Nichol said the fishermen would not let themselves suffer "because of phoney reports from Japan." He agreed the market is weak, "but not to the extent the companies would have us believe."

The comments came on the third day of a strike by herring roe fishermen represented by the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union and the Native Brotherhood of B.C.

Main issue in the dispute is prices for the roe. The last union demand is for prices of $1,400 a ton for gillnet-caught herring and $850 a ton for the lower-quality seiner-caught variety.

The Fisheries Association of B.C. has offered $640 a ton for gillnet herring and $325 for seiner herring.

Officials from Itoh C and Company and Mitsui and Co. (Canada) cite $640 as the top price, noting that some companies are still trying to sell 3,500 tons carried over from 1979.

"We've adopted a wait-and-see attitude," said Fred Akao, a representative for another firm, Marubeni Co.

Meanwhile, some independent and co-operative fishermen were getting mixed results so far in fishing off the west coast of Vancouver Island. The herring roe season is expected by federal fisheries officials to last another four to five weeks.

Dan Fraser spotted the trend

High rents here are forcing more and more people to look for someone to split the cost - and it works for most

Roomie boom: sharing, saving, hoping for best

Rochele Weber . . . a casual lifestyle

Janice Winfield . . . a few misfires

Bill Halkett photos

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Once upon a time it was common practice for college students or young career girls leaving home for the first time to share accommodation.

Today it seems just about everybody's doing it — stockbrokers and single parents, divorcees and senior citizens.

One reason the shared listings in the newspaper is getting longer as more and more people look for roomates, is the high cost of renting.

Last summer Fraser created Roommate Registrar, a Victoria referral service for people who want to find roomies.

The service offers a money-back guarantee and has successfully placed about 50 people so far.

"It's a growing trend, particularly with rising rents,'' says Fraser.

"It's more economical and in most cases much better than living on your own.''

Fraser estimates he's lived with 10 or 15 people over the years.

He now shares his house with a single mother and her two children and likes the family atmosphere so much he's looking for another single mother to move in.

His clients come in all ages and from every economic level.

Fraser found a roommate for a man with a $10,000 Afghan dog and a luxury condominium and recently had a client who was over the age of 70.

However, about 30 per cent of the inquiries about the service come from single mothers, who have great difficultly renting because of discrimination against children and a shortage of two and three-bedroom units.

Most people want roommates simply because it's cheaper, but Fraser says older clients are also concerned with companionship.

Fraser asks clients to fill out forms describing their work habits, interests, age and sex.

Fraser tries to match people of the same age group and sex — unless they state otherwise — and there have been some pretty interesting combinations.

Some roommates prefer to run a co-operative household limiting personal involvement with the other person.

Fraser, however, prefers communal living where chores are shared and everybody gathers around the dinner table for an evening meal.

"We cook together, eat together, do everything but sleep together,'' he said.

Lack of privacy is no problem for Fraser, who says he loves kids and noise.

And when problems arise they are discussed before they create friction.

Inviting a stranger into your home can be a risk, but Fraser says he is a good judge of character and so far hasn't made any disastrous matches.

"You take a gamble when you get into your car,'' he shrugs.

Fraser says for a $10 registration fee people can save themselves the hassle of dozens of interviews and — for women in particular — the problem of fending off weirdos.

His service charges a person seeking a place to live an additional $10 placement charge after registration.

Janice Winfield, a 24-year-old government employee, advertised on her own and remembers a few unpleasant experiences.

Of six previous roommates one was extremely untidy, another started a fist-fight over a boyfriend and a third — well, she'd rather just not talk about.

But Winfield says the hassle is worth it because she has fond memories of other friends who shared her large, two-bedroom apartment.

During her four years as a tenant she has always shared because it's cheaper.

"I must have received 125 calls. I finally had to take the phone off the hook.

"Some people were pretty unhappy I had already found a roommate after only one day.''

Money saved on rent is used travelling, says Winfield, who went to Barbados last year and recently returned from a trip to California.

Rochele and Monica Weber rent a four-bedroom house near Gorge Road Hospital and recently interviewed 25 or 30 people who answered their advertisement for two men to share it.

The two girls, originally from Saskatchewan, prefer living with men because the're easier to get along with.

"I lived with girlfriends before and usually you don't end up friends,'' says Rochele, 22, who works on call for B.C. Tel.

The pair had some trouble with their last male roommates, who skipped town without paying the rent, so they did some careful screening before selecting their new tenants.

The landlord, a family friend, doesn't mind them renting out their spare rooms, says Rochele.

She describes their lifestyle as casual. Since two people are seldom at home at the same time, meals are often eaten alone and everyone is expected to do their share of the cleaning.

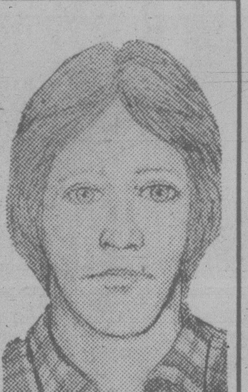
"Basically, it's everyone for themselves.''

Bridge pier going

Tenders wil be opened by the highways ministry March 13 on a contract to demolish the concrete bridge pier and a 15-metre steel plate girder span of the disused railway bridge over Interurban Road at Interurban and Burnside.

All work to be done, including removal of the materials, must be completed within a month afrer the contract is awarded.

The removal of the large concrete pier adjacent to the Trans-Canada Highway will increase visibility at the corner.



ARTIST'S sketch of suspect in last Friday's armed robbery of the T&W Market, 1165 Newport, was released today by Oak Bay police. Suspect was one of two youths who held up storeowner at knifepoint and escaped with $265, making their get-away on 10-speed bikes. Four women in a car chased them a short distance and provided police with a description which resulted in sketch drawn by Sgt. Bob Blair of Victoria RCMP.

Bennett prodded to fight cable sale

Capital Cable Co-operative has asked Premier Bill Bennett for a meeting to discuss the proposed takeover of Premier Cablevision by Canadian Cablesystems of Toronto.

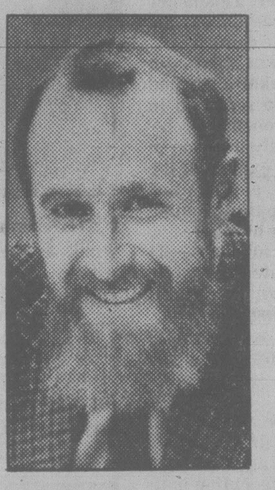
Capital Cable, sponsored by a number of Victoria residents, has tried unsuccessfully in the past to bid for the Victoria cable licence.

In a letter to the premier, co-op general manager Herschel Hardin refers to Bennett's public statement in regard to a proposed takeover of MacMillan Bloedel by Canadian Pacific that B.C. is not for sale.

"British Columbian ownership and control of its own cable licences — a cultural and communications sector — is even more essential to our self expression as a region,'' Hardin says.

Aside from its Victoria licence, Premier holds a licence in Vancouver and Coquitlam and has 340,000 subscribers.



HARDIN
. . . "crucial"

Hardin says this represents virtually half of all cable subscribers in B.C.

He says the company also has a 45-per-cent interest in Western Cablevision in Surrey and Abbotsford with another 67,000 subscribers.

"Control of the technical and financial capacity of the province's cable industry, for future developments, is a crucial consideration,'' he says.

"It is inconceivable that British Columbians will willingly let such a valuable and growing resource, and a monopoly public utility as well, be taken out of their hands by a Toronto company.

"It is no less disturbing, in fact quite shocking, that this outside takeover would happen through the exclusion of competing British Columbian applications for the same public licences.''

Hardin says the procedure whereby a Toronto conglomerate can apply for a public licence for Victoria and a community organization like Capital Cable cannot, is unconscionable.

Overweight and out-of-shape students are no surprise to Greater Victoria School District chairman Carol Pickup.

Pickup said today she is not shocked by an education ministry report rating physical fitness of students as weak and revealing a large number of them are obese.

"There's no doubt there are a number of children and adults in our society who are overweight,'' she said.

But she said education Minister Brian Smith is "totally out of whack'' when he blames schools for selling junk food to students.

Chocolate bars and chips were cleaned out of school vending machines several years ago.

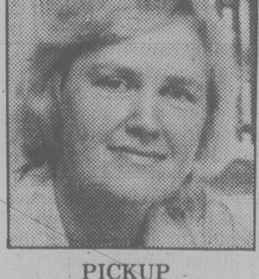
Smith said Tuesday vending machines that sell junk food should be removed from the schools.

He said vending machines are a common sight in schools and universities and as sources of quick nourishment.

Pickup said the problem is one of educating society, not just children in B.C. schools.

"The issue of obesity is much wider than the schools,'' she said.

Television commercials for junk foods have a lot of influence and people tend to watch television too much instead of going outdoors and exercising, she said.



PICKUP
. . . what about adults?

Students eat breakfast cereals that are 90 per cent sugar and then bring pop and chocolate bars to school or go out and buy junk food at lunchtime.

However, she admitted the school system could do more to educate students.

"We certainly could make an extra effort and should make an extra effort to improve programs,'' she said.

Pickup said she agrees with a remark by Smith that more emphasis should be placed on individual conditioning instead of highly competitive team sports.

Students should be taught that fitness is a lifetime pursuit, she said.

The report also notes a disturbingly high incidence of overweight students, both male and female, at the Grade 3, 7 and 11 levels.

Smith said he intends to take action to improve the situation.

Minister doesn't want vendetta with doctor

Health Minister Rafe Mair says he doesn't want to get into a vendetta with Victoria eye specialist Dr. Don North over who is to blame for an elderly patient going blind.

North charged last week his patient, suffering from cataracts, went blind while waiting six months to be admitted to Royal Jubilee Hospital [illegible] elective surgery.

Mair replied that the fault lies with North because he could have changed the surgery booking from elective to urgent and had his patient admitted months earlier.

North, in turn, accused the minister of taking the easy way out.

He said Mair had a choice between attacking the doctor or attacking the problem and he chose to attack the doctor.

"The last thing that will help the situation is for Dr. North and myself to get into some kind of vendetta. I don't want to get into that game,'' Mair said today.

He said the government is working to correct the problem of acute-care hospital beds being occupied by long-term-care patients and in the [illegible] he is looking to hospitals and doctors for cooperation in an awkward situation.

In response to reports of other eye patients waiting months for cataract surgery, Mair admitted it is possible "to make out some sort of inflammatory case,'' that will get lots of attention.

"My point is, let's get back to addressing the problem — that we haven't got enough beds to do all the jobs that are necessary unless we cooperate while new beds are being brought on stream,'' he said.

The minister's comments came as a spokesman for the United Church issued a call for the provincial government to build more extended care facilities for the elderly, releasing beds for surgery.

Some of the $300 million surplus reported by the government last year could be used to create more beds, Diane Kendall secretary of the Victoria Presbytery, suggests in a letter to Mair.

Kendall, said the church realizes the government is under pressure to spend millions on sports complexes and convention centres, but it believes extended health care should be given top priority.

Seriously ill people now have to wait three to five months for surgery at Royal Jubilee and Victoria General Hospitals because beds are occupied by extended care patients who have nowhere else to go, the letter points out.

"You are making big strides in the new hospital for Victoria, in the 50 beds made available for extended care in the Eric Martin Institute and in the proposed James Bay Extended Care Project.

"But as concerned people, particularly families young and old, we know of the dire shortage of beds for extended care. In Victoria we probably have more people over 65 than in any other city in Canada for its size.''

Long range planning is necesary to meet the needs of senior citizens, the letter says.

"We urgently submit that this proposal for such desperately needed facilities could and should be given a very high priority,'' Kendall says.

Meal for two is easiest

By KAY SPICER

When you're cooking for two everything is easier . . . shopping, preparation and clean-up. Nothing about it should be complicated or confusing. To simplify cooking for two buy as many foods as possible in individual size poritons . . . small steaks, chops and vegetables like potatoes, tomatoes, zucchini and artichokes.

Grate several cups of cheese at a time then place 1 cup portions in small plastic bags. Store in the refrigerator until you need them to scatter on a casserole or slip into a recipe. Preshape hamburgers, wrap and refrigerate or freeze. It's smart to have them ready and waiting. Plan your leftover dishes before you even cook the large roast you couldn't resist just because roast meat is always a treat.

SALMON STEAKS WITH ORANGE-BUTTER SAUCE

(Makes 2 Servings)

- 2 salmon steaks, 1" thick (fresh or frozen and defrosted)
- 1 tablespoon melted butter
- ⅓ cup dry white wine
- ⅓ cup orange juice
- 6 tablespoons butter
- 1 clove garlic, crushed
- 6 tablespoons whipping cream
- 1½ tablespoons chopped green onion tops
- Salt and pepper

Place salmon in shallow dish. Mix wine, orange juice and whites of green onions for marinade. Pour over salmon, set aside, covered, in refigerator for 1 hour. Spoon marinade over salmon several times during hour. Remove salmon from marinade to greased broiler pan, reserve marinade. Brush with half the melted butter. Broil 2 to 4 inches from source of heat 5 minutes, turn, brush with remaining butter and broil 5 minutes longer.

Pour marinade into small saucepan. Bring to boil, boil rapidly until liquid is reduced to about 3 tablespoons. Reduce heat to moderate, whisk in butter a tablespoon full at a time. Stir in crushed garlic and whipping cream, cook 1 minute. Remove from heat, stir in chopped green onion tops. Season with salt and pepper to taste.

ZUCCHINI AND PEAS

Makes 2 Servings

- 1 tablespoon butter or margarine
- 2 small zucchini, washed, trimmed and sliced thin
- 1 cup frozen green peas
- ½ teaspoon sugar
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon sweet basil
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper

Melt butter in frying pan. Add zucchini and peas. Stir-fry 5 minutes. Sprinkle with sugar, salt sweet basil and pepper. Stir and cook 2 minutes longer or until zucchini is tender-crisp.

CONFETTI SALAD

Makes 2 Servings

- 2 medium carrots, peeled and grated (about 1 cup)
- 1 medium apple, chopped (about ¾ cup)
- ½ cup thinly sliced celery
- ¼ cup chopped pecans
- 2 tablespoons mayonnaise
- 1 teaspoon sugar
- 1 teaspoon lemon juice

Combine carrot, apple, celery and pecans. Mix together mayonnaise, sugar an lemon juice; pour over carrot mixture; toss to mix well. Spoon into serving bowl.

BROWN AND WHITE BISCUITS

Makes 12 Biscuits

- 1¼ cup all-purpose flour, divided
- ¾ cup whole wheat flour
- 4 teaspoons baking powder, divided
- 2 teaspoons sugar, divided
- ½ teaspoon salt, divided
- 4 tablespoons butter, divided
- ½ cup milk, divided

Measure 1 cup all-purpose flour into one bowl; measure remaining ¼ cup all-purpose flour and whole wheat flour into a second bowl. To each bowl add 2 teaspoons baking powder, 1 teaspoon sugar, ¼ teaspoon salt and 2 tablespoons butter. Cut the butter through the flour with a pastry blender, two knives held close together or rub butter into flour between the thumb and fingertips or process each mixture in the food processor with sharp blade for 20 to 30 seconds. Stir ¼ cup milk into each mixture. Turn each pile of dough out onto a lightly floured board. Knead each piece 10 to fifteen times. Roll white dough into a round about ⅜ inch thick. Roll brown dough into another round same size as the white one. Place brown round on white; press together. Cut across diameter 6 times to form 12 even wedges. Place biscuits ½ inch apart on greased baking sheet. Let rise about 10 minutes. Bake in 450° F oven 12 to 15 minutes or until golden brown.
